

THE OCEAN OUTLAW.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, 98 WILLIAM STREET NEW YORK.
Am'n News Co., 119 & 121 Nassau St., N.Y.

THE SPORTING FAWN!

"The dim aisles of these woods are not alone the haunt of the surly bear and the stealthy panther. Behind that giant beach may lurk the fierce human tiger—the red Indian—who scents human blood as the vulture scents the air tainted with death. Beneath that dense copse of briar and fern, cronches the wary white ranger, whose eagle eye scans the forest like an arrow that goes everywhere, and in whom the red savage finds his only master. Peace may brood over the green silences, but a death-shrick may at any moment thrill and quaver on the air."

Beadle's Dime Novels, No. 20

TO ISSUE TUESDAY, AUG

will present to the lovers of Forest Fiction a wild rying drama of the "North Shore" wilderness, dreaded Pontiac had kindled his war-fires along the creat Lakes, v

SCARRED EAGLE:

OR,

MOOROOINE, THE SPORTING FAWN.

BY ANDREW DEARBORN.

AUTHOR OF "WHITE SERPENT, THE SHAWNEE SCOURGE," ETC., ETC.

Reviving some of the remarkable characters who played eventful parts in the "White Serpent," the author has created for them a new fame in this brilliant and exciting tale.

In the middle of the very shadow of death filts the beautiful Moorooine—at once a good angel and a heroine.

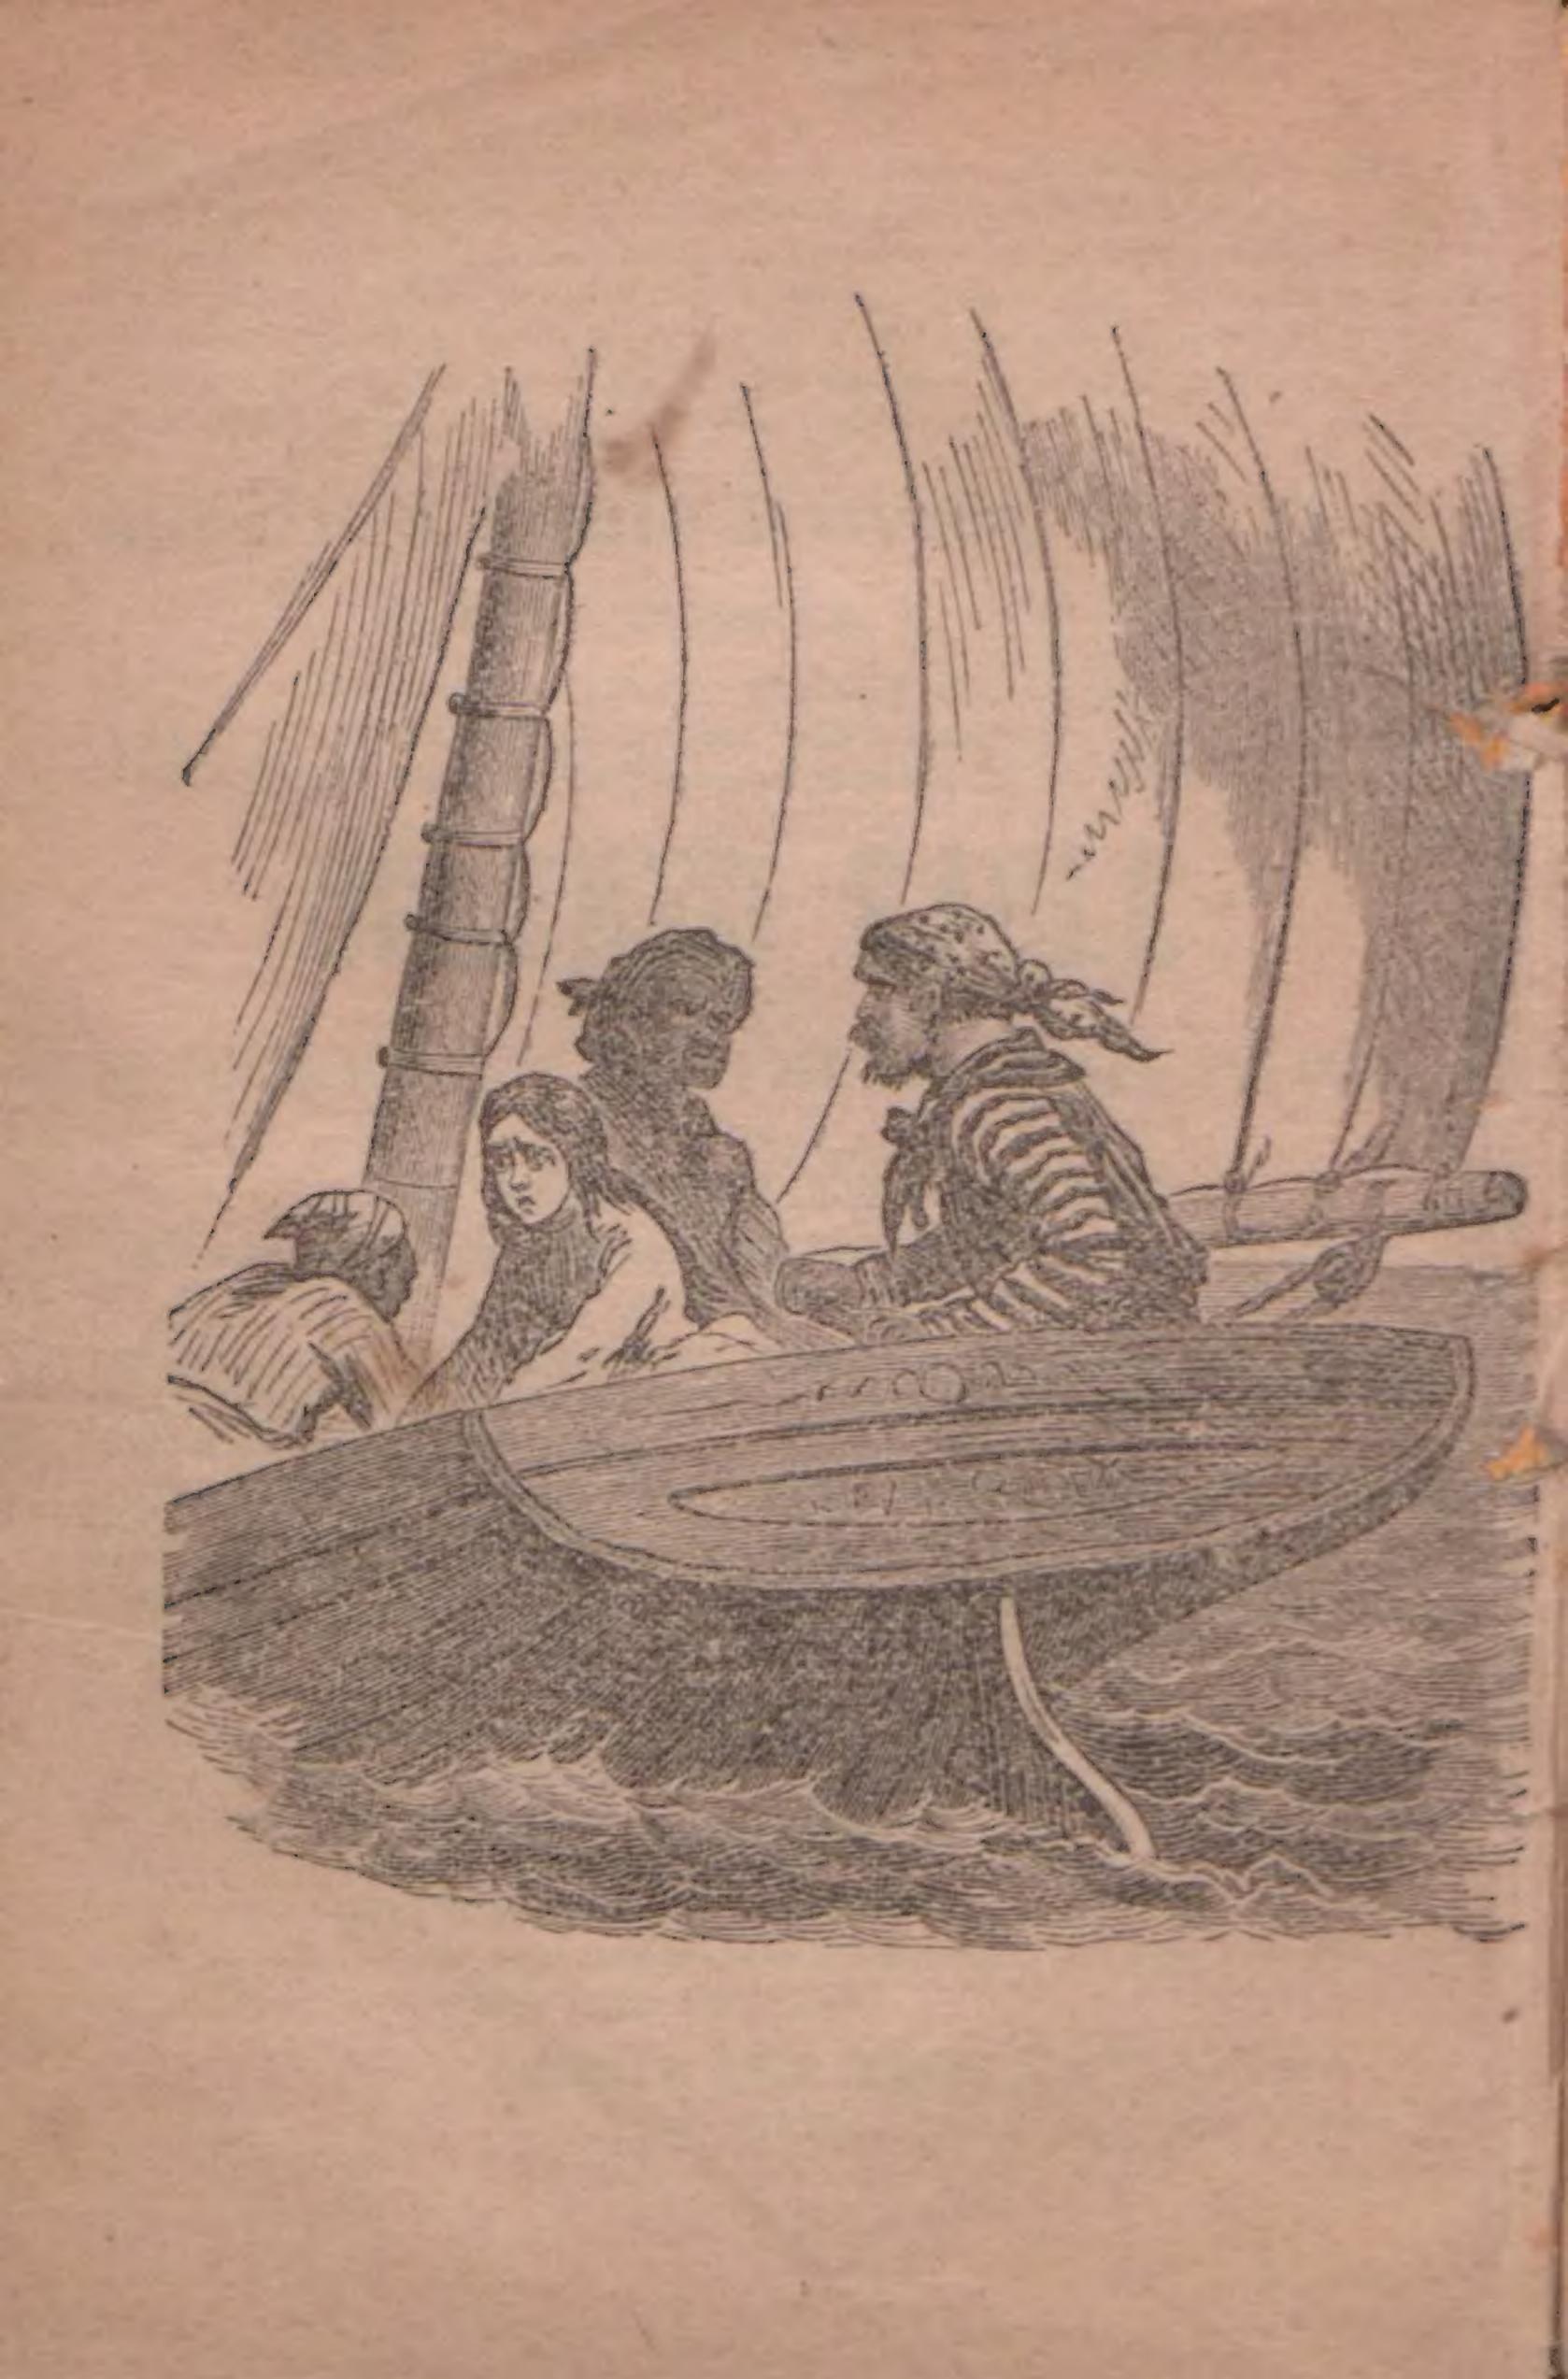

The pen-pictures of the forest—of the fierce warriors of Pontiac—of that hard frontier life which it took nerves of steel to combat—of the "course of true love" under appalling dangers and trials—all are so clearly limned that he who reads will not soon forget.

"Beadle's Dime Novels are STANDARDS in the field of American Historie Romance, and are eagerly read in Homes and Highways, in Offices and Shops," says an excellent authority. He could have added—they well deserve the attention of every parent, every boy and girl, every person who wants what is pure and good in our romantic literature.

For sale by all Newsdealers and Booksellers; or sent, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price-Ten Cents.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers,
98 William Street, New York.

OCEAN OUTLAW;

OR,

THE STOLEN SISTER.

Alle Water and the Control of the Co

TEND 4073

BY J. R. CALDWELL.

DEW YORK:

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS,

98 WILLIAM STREET.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1870, by

BEADLE AND COMPANY,

In the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

(No. 208.)

OCEAN OUTLAW.

CHAPTER L

The mid-day watch was set, beneath the blaze of light, When there came a cry from the tall mast-head: "A sail! a sail in sight!"

And o'er the far horizon a snowy speck appeared, And every eye was strain'd to watch the vessel as she near'd.

Anon.

Beautiful Florida! With thy orange and magnolia groves, with the sapphire ocean laving thy level shores, and the balmy breath of the tropics sweeping from the Gulf across thy perfumed forests, with thy romantic glens, and canes, and barbors, the haunt of the wild buccaneer, and the refuge of the storm-driven mariner: it is of thee, O beautiful land of romance! that I would speak.

A few miles from St. Augustine, in the State of Florida, about the year 1825, stood a lone and beautiful cottage. Its many and convenient outbuildings; its wild and truly romantic scenery, plainly indicated that the owner was a person of wealth and cultivated taste.

The cottage occupied the summit of a gentle eminence that sloped gradually down until its base was washed by the ocean waves, a hundred yards from the door; while, on the other side, the declivity terminated in a wild forest dell, through which a stream of considerable magnitude made its way over a rocky bed; its course interrupted by many miniature cascades, until it finally dashed down a craggy precipice, and was received in a tiny lake, whose clear water reflected like a mirror the outlines of the giantic trees that grew on its margin, and the simple wild flower that dipped its leaves in the pure element.

A large garden, filled with the choicest floral productions, surrounded the mansion, perfuming the air with their exotic fragrance, while the orange and lime-trees, bending under their golden burthen, formed a delightful retreat from the scorching rays of a mid-day sun; and the cottage, whose walls were half-concealed by vines and creeping plants, seemed the very idea of rural beauty.

A striking contrast to this beautiful arrangement was apparent in the lofty forest that, within a short distance, stood in native grace and strength, having scarcely been invaded by the woodman; and so closely were the branches entwined together, and so dense the luxuriant foliage, that it was difficult to obtain even a glimpse of the blue arch above.

A rough pier skirted one side of a small cave at the foot of the garden, to which was moored a boat, furnished with a mast and sail, which, in fine weather, and a smooth sea, formed a very pleasant mode of conveyance to St. Augustine, or any other voyage of similar brevity.

The owner of the place we have so briefly described was known in the neighborhood by the name of Ralph Gray. He had first appeared there some fifteen years prior to the opening of our story, representing himself as a sea-captain, who was anxious to obtain a quiet home for his family, where he could safely leave them while absent, in his wandering profession. He was apparently about forty years of age, possessed of a singularly tall, commanding person, rather handsome features, and bore unmistakable proofs of having, in the course of his life, been acquainted with polished society. He was very reserved in his manner, saying very little to any one, and promptly foiled every attempt made by curious strangers to learn anything of his history previous to his appearance among them.

After spending a day or two in looking over the neighboring country, he made a selection that suited him, and at once set about clearing a small plot of ground, erecting a house, and attending to other preliminary matters. This done, he departed in the same secret, mysterious manner in which he came, leaving no one the wiser as to where he had gone, or when he intended to return to his purchase.

Six months passed without bringing any news from him, and many stories were whispered among the gossips to account for the non-appearance of their strange visitor.

Suddenly, however, he returned, accompanied by an elderly female, whose business seemed to consist in looking after a little girl, some three years of age. These, together with an old seaman, who, to use his own expression, was hardly sea-worthy, comprised his family.

Gray remained but a short time at his new home. After the lapse of a few days, he left little Ethel and Mrs. Mills in the care of Silas Morton (the old seaman) and again departed.

For a time the inhabitants of Glen's Cottage, (for such was the name conferred by Ralph Gray upon his purchase) found it rather lonely; but Morton was soon on familiar terms with nearly every person in the neighborhood, and being generally liked, it resulted in the gradual admission of the family into the limited circle of society the place afforded.

Mrs. Mills, too, had a happy faculty of insinuating herself into the good graces of those around her, and little Ethel was the pet of every one. So, in due time, they found their place more agreeable than was at first anticipated.

In one thing Ralph Gray had been fortunate, if in no other, in the selection of Silas Morton for his steward; no man ever had one in whom he could place more implicit confidence.

The old sailor's life had been a checkered one—thirty years of it had passed on the ocean in every clime, from the torrid sands of Africa to the frozen regions of the Arctic Circle. Want of early education had prevented him from rising to any important position in his calling, yet, in the humble sphere in which his lot was east, his simple, unaffected piety had commanded a respect and exerted an influence upon officers and men that many superior to him in education and social standing would have failed to accomplish. By prudence and unwearied exertion, he had laid by quite a fortune; but the sudden failure of a merchant in whose hands his funds were placed, reduced him to penury; and that, too, when his advancing years were rapidly unfitting him for duties on ship board; consequently, the situation offered him by Gray was gladly accepted, as the duties were light and well suited to his mind.

Towards little Ethel, all the warm feelings of his nature were drawn. Nothing that would contribute to her happiness, within his power to do, was left undone; and the child learned to repay him with little acts of kindness that strengthened the strong feeling of friendship that existed between them.

With few exceptions, Morton was the only person in the neighborhood that could boast of any acquaintance with the eccentric Captain Gray, and was the only one admitted to his confidence.

During the brief visits which the latter made at home, he passed nearly the whole time in wandering over his plantation, accompanied by the former; pointing out the improvements he wished made, and giving general directions about his business. But these visits were so soldom made, and never prolonged beyond two or three days, that for the most part, Morton was left to manage the farm as best suited his fancy.

As yet the mystery connected with the Grays had not been explained to the satisfaction of a curious public. Though Morton had been thoroughly catechised, the amount of information obtained was very trifling. It was just this: His employer was a sea captain; went to sea; and was, to all appearance, very wealthy. It was also observed that when he came home, he always came from the West In lies, but never in his own vessel.

This was all that could be learned upon the saliect, for Silvs Morton and Mrs. Mills had both been engaged at Silves inc. and, of course, knew no more of his former littery than he chose to tell them; and as he did not the other to tell them anything, the newsomm personal to that themselves with set ing Gray down as a min who all free ors of his own for wishing to remain unknown. This conclusion satisfied all parties, and the Glen cotters continued to live in a quiet, retired manner, up to the time when our story commences.

Laben years had not produced any interid change in the reighborhood of Glencetinge; but it had trunsformed L'hel from a pretty child into a lovely girl of cight on. Though unlike Captain Gray in Laughty and received de-Level r, she person considerably a ove the medium height, yet so perfetly symmetrical, the characterized by such unaffectedly gravely move-Irrids, that it would sellow be noticed, and with ways gently and whening among her friends, but limited and rep lit g to all un lue fenil arity, she commanded the respect, Live are la lu iration of all who knew her. A'most un die l In tractions, she is all possessed herself of an election that ill best to her love of knowledge, and that indicated a in the class common order. Having a natural partien for nuit, she possed much of her leisure time with the harm er gaiter; either of which she touched with a skillid 1 - 1. But ier chief de light consisted in a hainistering to the wars of the per and affected. Her father's begive constitutions distinct means for her gratultons diste' ' 's; and many a willow and orphin, 'mel' so by in al end faller finding a grave in the eccan) by her indicated and hear relieved from eternal want. (somethir, it was not strange that wherever she was construction was greenly applicabel, her be my count-of both sexes.

CHAPTER II.

It was a beautiful afternoon in the early put of the turn, that a boat, manned by two or three nearly, this is have been seen rapidly approaching the share in the direction of Glen's cottage. As it is red the interest as young man stood up in the stern, and appear it to be taking a survey of the coast.

At that moment, Ethal, accompanial by Siss Marion, stepped from the house, and walked toward to piece. But on seeing the approaching boat, they stopped to exercise it.

Morton, lowering the spy-glass with which he had have to give scanned the little craft, "so I funcy we shall have to give up our little voyage for the present. I wish that him would give us a wide berth, for do you know, I i with the him over well; and, if I am not mistaken, we shall fall he's sailing under false colors yet."

"Perhaps you are projudiced in your judiced. She is answered Ethel, slightly blushing, "and he is the restrict strange follow, but he may not be as ball as you thank is, after all."

world too much, and seen too many chaps of his car, to be humbugged very easy."

"But he is in the cupley of my father, and may being some news from him; so, for that reason, if for models,"

I ought to treat him civilly."

and is, frank to he in Cartain Gay's and a and is, frank t know; but frail that, I want part to cartail that you do not belove all the flar your for spins, or make any promises."

"Why, Pake," answer 1 Day, harping, " I indicate to thick you are jedous, you make such a serious mutter of nothing: Mr. Granger is well enough, but I'm not going to renewly with him, as you seem to fear I am."

"It Mr. Granger is such a one as your father would recome on how hy does he always come when he is away, as heven wants you to promise not to let him know that he comes here at all? You can't make that look honest, any way."

"What makes you think he asked me to make such a promise?"

"I mintentionally overheard him, Miss, when he was love about six months ago; when he first let out that he was one of your father's men, and went on with all that large—how some one had set Captain Gray against him. You see, it don't sown I likely, that he would keep an officer that he didn't like better than all that comes to."

"Then you think the story was un'rue."

"No doubt of it. When I heard that he beionged to your father's craft, I thought it strange that he did not tell us that part in the beginning."

"I do not see what good it would do Mr. Granger to tell such a story, unless it was true."

"In all in a lillity he had a region for so doing, and Well! there is no harm done, for I dill not make the product Mr. Greeger wished me to; and if my father ever notes I can learn whather your suspicions are correct or not."

"I russ, after Cottin Gry hars the story, we shark so my nor of Mr. Gruger in this cruising ground, M s Ethel."

I wish by father would come; it sooms as the will never tell us anything about his business."

"Y all now as here it about it as any one does; for a recent to be a sure to your bis defeated will be the sixty or refer that will probably explicit. But I may as well be off, for I see Mr. Granger is closs by, and he will not be obliged to me for my com-

So saying, Morton walked away, and left E held to receive her guest, who had linded, and was approximately her.

The new comer was a young man in the neighborhood of twenty-five, and, at the first glaster, would have be a pronounced the perfection of masculine beauty in force at figure; but one skilled in human nature would have at once detected in his countenance an expression in limited the of much cunning, and sinister motives, that in hered his otherwise hands one features repulsive and forbilling.

He was dressed in the usual costume of the sallor, and the full, white trowsers, blue jacket, pumps and broad-brimmed hat, all appeared very becoming, and it was vor apparent, from the free and easy way he assumed, that he was aware of his personal aluminate, and conflict of a ability to please, although he noticed that, for some read, littled did not appear to welcome him quite as war alvest usual, and such was the case. For motivities and all the most included Morton, in whose judgment she had recorded him, there are soft Morton, in whose judgment she had the most include confidence, sunk into her heart.

She knew little of the world and its ways, and now rethought of distrusting one who was, to all appearance, a gentle non, and moreover, possessed the warm tofrindship for her family.

But the words of her o'd friend opened a new train of thought. She had be n wont to look up n Granter as one who could, if he chose, be a very equable companie, and had always welcomed him with pleasure, as sare well any other friend.

She now saw the matter in a different light; she envior mannered that there were some suppliers of the stress connected with his visits, and wendered she had never looked at it in the smeet light before.

Ethel had seen Stephen Granger, for the first time, the strongers before. He had become required by accident, in some of his ramble ge, and at most back quite a ten ler aspect, though he had never made any formal declaration of intentions. Some six months before, as has been already intimated, he informed her that he was in the employ of her father, and requested a silence on her part, in relation to his visits—giving the before-givened reasons to account for it. Though, at the time, is a bardly knew what, she had declined giving him the desired promise, but thought nothing more of the matter, until it was alladed to by Silas Morton.

However, Granger's wishes had been complied with thus far; for since the time referred to, Ralph Gray had not been at home, and, consequently, remained in ignoruse of the acquaintance existing between Ethel and his first officer.

Ethel had full time for reflection, while her visitor was evened in securing his boat, and making his way through the garden to the place where Martin had just left her.

"Good day, M'ss Ethel," he said, gaily, at the same time extending his hand with the air of an old acquaintment. "I am fortunate, in leed, in finding you at home. I think you usually take advantage of all the fine weather to go on your many charity tours among the poor, beauther leathers of this cutlandish part of the world, and if I am not mistaken, you were just on the wing now."

The tone and manner of Gring r would have discusted I it is, but she been in her most anished mood; and, under existing circumstances, she thought his bold, funitian large un advantale, and therefore replied with cutting a column, and without touching the extended hand:

"Mr. Granzer soems to have a very exilted opinion of some 'y here; an opinion to which I cannot agree, as I do not find friends such barbarians as you seem to think them."

This cool retort took Granger quite by surprise; he had never some his companion in such a mool before, and, at first, attributed the change to the unwonted manner in which he had allressed her. And he very will, re-

"Parlon me, Miss Gray," he said, in a hearlie two, if I have unintentionally offer led. I assure you there neak I made was only said in jost, and I have you will forgive the first offence."

"Your off nee, as you term it, is easily park not. Sin' said Dthel, as she turned away. "But you will please excuse me, for I was about to visit St. Augusting and I think Mr. Morton is quite really to accompany not."

"If I am really parloned, M ss Gray, permit to be your escort; my boat is at your savice, if you will accept it."

Hibel was vexed, but she saw that the quide was to get rid of her unwelcome visitor, would be to a very the invitation, and she determined to inform Grant reference opinion she entertained of him, should an opport by offer.

For some time Grunger attempts I to got up a cover tion on general subjects, but with i'll save ——Problem reglying in more virial sate his well-coin laptors. At largeh, however, she looked up, and soil:

"I suppose you have soon my father lately; it is so long since he has visited us, that we haght to it in a uneasy."

"Yes! I saw him at Havena, a few days are; in secured in file spirits, and said he should be at the regist of the fore long. I am also happy to say that the regist of the cious he has entertained in regard to mys liber on it y removed. He assured me that I was restored to his confidence, so I ventured to acquaint him with reversity his family, and ask his permission to confident in a figure of the I am happy to say, my request was realizable great days.

"If your clearatier has be a rejudy I am girly that y u are restored to haver," in proceed the Ethel.

Stephen Granger saw that something was armed: interpretable at a loss to divine the eart. This is to the tion at Gien C trage had always been so could that he is a ling real he was high in flavor, and had resolved that a expresent opportunity should not pass, and leave him in the estimation of Miss of the open of his real standing in the estimation of Miss of the Terreus as that will appear it reafter, how is anxious to early out his plans had be free Cottin Grey returned, a withstocking the good terms on which he profess d to the with him. And though Ethel was in anything but an extra the mood, he had no idea of bling frightened at what might prove in the end nothing but a woman's whim.

"Allow me, Miss Gray,," he said, in a grave voice, "to inquire if anything has happened to in lace you to charactery your original in regard to myself? for I had enter also I the idea, through perhaps without crosse, that I was, it leaf, looked upon by you in the light of a friend!"

"Mr. Grerger!" arswered Ethel, with that quiet digrily so connecteristic of herself, "I will answer your quistions from'ty. I a hult that, until to-day, I have look upon you as a—a friend; but circumstances, that you will not be at a loss to divine, if my suspicions are end, have convinced me that I have been deceived—and han man rithit will a hait of no pullivion. What have just told me is true; but I fear that an opposite ce hashe will be the result of an interview with bise.
And now, if you place, we will return; I do not care to visit my friends to-day."

Granger bit his lip, and in spite of his effect to appear ele, a fleree light shot from his eyes, that did not escape to a flere of Helicl; but he almost immediately matered his follows, and answer d in a very subduct voice:

I know not what circumstances have induced you to find a judiment so here's and orjust; but a constraint to soft a constraint so here's and originat; but a constraint to soft a constraint so here's have all little, at some fitters in., you will be convinced that I have a tell in every respect like an honorable man."

"If I ever learn that Mr. Grang r has been julged with undue harshness, it will give me pleasure," s.il Ethel, coolly.

Her compar'm made no answer; but turning away to hide his rage, he put his boat about, with the intention of returning. But at that moment she was struck by a flow of wind, and, before he had time to think, was completely upset.

As the boat went over, Granger's foot became entangled in a coil of loose line that held him firmly, notwithstanling the desperate efforts he made to free himself. And the negroes, being unable to swim, there seemed no alternative for Ethel but to perish alone.

But the accident had been witnessed by a young man on the shore, who sprang down the bank, pling I into the water—and, after the utmost exertions, succeeded in bringing the drowning maiden safe to land. He that turned to look for Granger, but saw that he had released himself, and was swimming rapilly over the way stoward the shore; while the two darkies, who had managed to get astride the inverted boat, sat there, the very picture of black despair.

"You seem to have met with an accident, ship are," said the young stranger, who was attired in the uniform of the British Navy, and appeared to be about the same are of Granger, "and as your boat don't some in a condition to proceed on her voyage immediately, you will, proceed accept the use of mine to convey the lady home. I have one less than half-a-mile from here, that is entirely at your service."

"You will all another fivor to the already inviense debt of gratitude I owe you," said Elde, "by assisting me to reach home, which is near by."

"Your wishes shall be at once complied with," he answered, and then added, in a gray voice: "I hape you will not feel under the least obligation, as I can easy consider myself highly favored to have it in my power to rescue a lady from danger."

Grange, eacily; "but as the lady's position is in....... comfortable, we had better take measures to improve it. If you will inform me where your boat is to be found, I will go after it at once."

"I will go for it myself, and will return presently," rei'd I the other, without noticing the ungracious speech of Gonzer, who, in addition to the unfortunite issue of his hive-making, was mortified that circumstances had previnted him from being the one to save Ethel from a watery grave, instead of a stranger stepping in to rob him of the honor.

In a very short time the young Englishman returned with his boat, and assisted the unfortunate voyagers to carbark.

"Do you think your darkies can hold on until we return? or shall we set them on shore first?" he aske !, looking at Granger.

"If they can't hold on, let them go to the devil," he answered, forgetting for a moment the presence of Miss Gray, who at once interposed.

"I hope you will not think of going away, and I aving these poor fellows in that situation," she said, addressing the stranger. "A few monent's delay will be of no coasequence to me, and may save their lives."

"Well then, let us go back after the black cattle with all possible despatch, or they may take call," sail Granger.

The best was immediately turned toward the ship-wrecked negroes, and, in a few moments, had them all on beard, suffeand sound. They then took the ours, and very soon the little craft entered the coverate the foot of Captain Gray's garden, and had all its earge on the pier in safety.

The years sermen declined stopping, velaute sing to return with Grang r, and as let blin in the recovery of his boat.

The offer was accepted, Chargh samewhat ungra-

"Will you flavor me with your name?" she said, with an air of interest that made Granger turn away, with a muttered curse of rage and jealousy.

"Mas havis Howar!" he answere! bowing: "will we my with place in of a larger of a larger to port health, will a larger to be will be enthagered by this unateract of a larger to be a larg

"The person to whom I am in lebel for life will the ways be a welcome visitor."

"Thank you! But allow use to report that I confine report to feel in the least in lebted; the obligation is wholly on my part."

is stying, the gallant young Englishmen pilitly wished her good night.

The boat pulled off, and she slowly walked to var little house, where she was met by Sias Maron who, derived by her appreciance, would not rest until be had been tall that had transpired.

Howard, in the manima, returned with Gonz t to-ward the sene of the late disister. On the way the later, freel from the restrict that the process of Most Gray imposed upon him, radial, and become more solute. He professed the utmost graditude to his comparion to his timely assistance in recovering his intendiches he less the less that less the less that again, and of continuing an appoint of some numbers at a musual discontinuing an appoint the feat as they had but it; and, in a little time has righted, the water bailed out and ready for solutions to evenly lading a move of a lyange, they list no the continuing had a little that as a coldent, about midnight.

as Granger turned to leave him.

town to him to say that I shall be obliged to he town to him to never to him to him to he had been to he had be busying his mind with reflections on his day's alventure, and in thanking fortune that Granger's business prevented him from being his companion in his intended visit to Glen's Cottage.

"Ged night!" rep tel H ward, a le witt i mij.

At an early hour the following morning, agreeably to a pointment. Howard presented howelf at the residence of Cuptain Gray. He was received by Ethel with unatternal pleasure, and at once set about making his call as agreeable as possible.

"I hope you experienced no ill effects from the acrident yester lay," he began, after one or two common-place remarks.

Etael assure I him that she had sustained no serious injury, and the conversation turned on various topics of interest, in the course of which, Howard alluded to some exact in his own history, and gained some insight into that of his companion.

Errort Howard was the younger son of a wealthy Erglish gention m, and consquently on the to make his can fortung in the world. But pass sing a will end is viel and evergeth mind, he booked furthing the well, and saw that fame and har read both be obtained by prince and persever nee. Wi'l this mark in view, he entered the navy at flateen years of are, as milking man, and had cominged to work his way from one past to arther, always discharging his duties with fait dalues and promptitude, until, at the are of twenty-five, Lett. the comme sion of second lier curt on how line H. B. M. sign, Win 's r, that had been consider in the vicinity of the Was I dies, in search of a notal is piraled show, harman is the Sa Valuary, whose daing de is, and a ne-, 'y invierible charattr, hala pir daterble reneva. A for days presions the Winder Lat pating St. Arrestime, and Howard, who was positive for hold having, had taken that epport white to engage in his the alte spart, and willess our rel, had with and the werldent that 1 1 Generals d, in time to real r Miss Gray the alsistance already mentioned.

It was late before Liverment Howard resettings. To him, the evening had passed much more pleasantly than was anticipated. He had found Ethel posses of a degree of intelligence and refinement that he little expected to find developed in one who had passe I her life so ex lasively. He thought it a strange plant to spring from such a soil, and it was with a feeling of regret, that he rell-ted on the improbability of seeing her again, as his vess! was expected to sail the next day. The more he thought of the matter, the more strange dil it appear to him, that one, with her refined tastes and ladylike accomplishments, could be the afflanced bride of such a man as Granger, whose face and figure was, in his opinion, his only recommendation to a wom in like Ethel Gray. Truly, he thought to himself, love is blind, not to see through a character so transparent. But after-experience s'orvel Lieu'enant Howard that Granger was a more accomplished deceiver than he took him to be, and was even able to mystify as uise a person as himself, when occasion require lit. As for our heroine, she could not help being pleased with the gentlemanly manners and polished aldress of her visitor, independent of the feeling of yestrday, she felt to ward him as the preserver of her life; and very possibly she might have enter ained sentinents of a more ten ler nature. If so, it was a subor linate f cling, of which she was unconscious at the time; simply as el s nyen, that, under favorable circumstances, might take room and spring up.

CHAPTER III.

After bilding Lieutenant Howard good night, Grunger to ally retraced his steps toward his boat. He reached it in a few minutes; and, taking his place in the stern, ordered the negroes to give way. They seemed to understand their destination, for they pulled off in perfect silence, and in less than ten minutes they brought their but alongside of a small schooner that had nothing about it that indicated it to be anything but a common merchantmen, except two or three guns she carried, and there was nothing very strange in that, as many versels carried them at that time, as a protection against the pirates that indicated some parts of the opean for some years after that date.

"Call all hands, and get under way as soon as may be, Mr. Ken'el," said Granzer, as he mounted the dies, and with a fit, with an air that plainly showed be was communed by. "We have a fine breeze, and, before daylight, we shall make a good offing, and be well on our way home."

"Aye, aye, sir," answered the mate, for such the was, who was althese has Mr. Kendel, and stepping forward, he provide the execute the caption's order. It a few pions at less opporte care on deck, yawning and rubble their eyes, and evide, 'ly but half awaks. Ho vever, every run was soon at his post, and the little craft, and the little craft, the little larbor, and the shore was quickly lost to view amid the hazy darkness.

presention Green continual to wilk the deck with a largerie, their new and then to certain ever eit, to see that or willier was arranged with proper region, and seating himself on a gun-carriage, remained for a long time, apparently hast the reflection; while two or three of the men were collection a knot, forward, listening to the account of his alventure assore, which was given, with sunlry embellable alterates, by one of the darkies who accompanied him.

"Rather think Mass r Granger won't go to see his high ly lub agen wery soon," said the nagro, with a low challe."
"She was offish, a little bit, and didn't seem no ways have tionate like."

"What was the matter, Jack, that made the girl so hard to please?"

"Bress me, but how should I know anything about it, and if I did, d'ye s'pose I'd 'vulge massa's somet?"

"What are you jubbering about, you black result" said Granger, who, unperceived, had approvided nor enough to hear the last part of the conversation, "takes that, and learn to keep that cursed black tongue of your still!" he continued, as he laid his heavy care over the shoulders of the frightened black, who beat a rapid retreat, muttering:

"Messa pretty consilible cross: wonder what the libbil ail him; Teard it don't agree with him very well to obashore."

"I wish to be called in about two hours, Mr. Kordal." said Granger, as he turned away, and described to the cabin, leaving the men to the full enjoyment of the story related by Jack.

For the next two homes the vessel localed rally forward, be one a fine, who's also breeze, and the way and dock were seated around in victous groups, spire grans or singing songs, to pass away the boxy hours who a must intervene before the watch could be explainted as the releve them. Though apparently in the best personal man, their conversation would have convined a set. I that they were as rough a set as could well to forch that they were as rough a set as could well to forch that they were made in a particular they were victorial to the forch other for the mastery in producing we have a discount of harder for the mastery in producing with a local bridge say.

rung on the evening air as though devils hall broke has trome the infamal regions, and were assembled for a jubilee.

At the expiration of the time sit by Gruger to be completed knocked at his state-room door. He is a completely accele, and taking from his trank a small convertage, went on deck.

The mills, or rather the morning, was now clear, at least a form of windom and so he stood looking around, as those all the printed in a tracing something he was in search on Sillarly, however, his eye settled on a point and little wave of waters, that proved, on close inspection, to least small that the limit of a few rocks, covered with sand, that differ like show over them, were worthy of the name of the limit and as it was, however, it was an object of interaction time. He give or less to alter their course a little to limit as a short time they had approached the had as near as it was safe to venture.

"Rund to, and lower a boat," was the brife much let Granger; "and three or four of the laziest of your get ready to go on shore."

The order was choyed promptly; the best was mannel, and stopping in, be pointed in the direction he wished to go, at ittle yould both. A short row brought the a to a recly information island, where Coptain Grange, whise, a difficulty, succeeded in landars, and was about which graway, but stopping a moment, he said, in a manner that convinced his non-he was in curnest:

"I wish you to remain here; and if I see any one trying to decime, he will get the contents of this pis h, o don't forget."

a little hill, was out of sirit, leaving his men not a little surprised at his strange proceeding.

he will put a ball through me, neither."

Sold in the stepped out of the book, and Was som creeping carefully up the hill, behind which the other had disappeared. On gaining the smandt, he boked down and saw, but a few rols before him, the captain, bushe engaged in scraping out a hole in the sind, eviloutly for the reception of a small bug that by by his side.

"So that is what you are up to, Stephen, is it?" said Rollins, to himself. "Well, well, my boy, we will stop that trade of yours. I don't think you will appropriate much more money that belongs to the company. And it I don't fill your berth on board before long, I will wan less But I had better be creeping back, or I shall be on the way to the devil's healquarters shortly."

Without disturbing Granger, Rollies slipped quiet we down the hill and regained the boat, where he had full time to communitate what he had seen before he was joined by the captain, who bridly or level them to return to their schooner.

It is well known that many of the small, uninhabited islands comprising the West India group, for a long time formed the invorite retrest of the bus in sers, who were I'mg the terror of the sets in that part of the wall. There, secure from the eye of man, they would contain their ill-rotten wealth, and hold their demon-like care is also tras en and uninterrupted. To one of these islands, situatelnear the south in coest of Con, we must follow the little schooner, commented by Cattin General It was a bright moonlight might, that the "Cre'-we-i-, ece" - (for so Gring r's ves el wis edle!) - was stade dairig under elsy sail, close under the western some of the island before-mentioned, whose surface, overcrown with Lift trees and interwoven with bashes and rank vertice tion, pres ated an unalluring aspect to any says these who wished to hile from the companionship of their fellowhuman beings.

For the next half hear the schoner kept on in her course, gradually approaching their rathe shore, until a deep, narrow arm of the schones appeared, that, at a first glance, would have been mistaken for the mouth of a fiver.

Into this they steered, and in a few minutes were lost to view from the outside.

The pavigation now became intricate, the channel, though deep enough for the accommodation of a much larger craft than Granger's, was so narrow and crooked, that the greatest caution was necessary to prevent a cident. And the girantic trees that grew on the margin seemed to unite their branches, and form an arch through which the little vessel quickly pursued her way.

For something like two miles the voyagers continued to follow the serpentine windings of the channel, that somed to grow more narrow and crooked as they proceeded, and the dark forest on either side mers dense and cheerless, until farther progress seemed in possible from a large wall of rocks that apparently filled up the channel from side to side. However, the schooner kept boddy on her way, until the jib-boom almost touched the wall, and then a narrow passage-way appeared breaking directly through it, into which they passed, and in a few moments were floating in a broad, still basin, completely hid from the channel on the other side.

A rough voice now hailed them from the rock with the challenge of:

"Who goes there?"

This was answered by showing a light at the foremastlead. The signal appeared to be understood and the "Catch-Lim-if-you-can" passed up as near as possible to the beach and let go her anchor.

An ther and a larger vess I was moored within this natural hardor, whose tall spars, raking fore and aft; the recovered of white, pierced here and there by a portable; the production with which everything was arranged, we ill have tell an experienced eye she was an armed vessel.

The orester part of her crew appeared to be on shore, so the land a large fire, built in the centre of a large compiliated update a small clearing on the margin of the basin.

At the netra (considered by Grang r's vessel coming to anchor, the whole party started up and hastened down to the water. A best was lowered away, the caption and a few of the men stepped in, and were soon on had, where they were greeted with loud shouts of we'come by their companions.

"Where's the captain?" sail Rollins, almost as soon as he set foot on land, to one of the men.

"I saw him go up to the shanty an hour ago; so I guess he has turned in."

"Well, I want to see him, so I guess I will go up there."

So saying, Bill Rollins walked toward the only but of habitable appearance, and knocked at the door, which was opened by no less a person than our former acquaint day, Rulph Gray, whose face brightened when he recognized the newcomer.

"Ah, Bill, is that you? When dil you get in?"

"We just come, Captain Gray."

low you made out."

"I have found out that S'eve Granger, as you supported, has been playing us false; the bag of money that was missed he buried on a little island, and I would not wander if that same little bit of had contained don't had the plun ler that the whole bund has picked up."

"Very like. For Steve has been busy for the last two or three years, but I don't think that he will get held of much more in the future. We will try what couldn't at will do for his muscles. You go and send him up have, Rollins, and follow on, with two or three of the boys, and be ready to take charge of him."

Rollins turned to go, but at that moment the door opened, and Granger himself entered.

"Good evening, Captain Granger," said Gray, as he motioned the other to retire). "I was just about souling for you. What luck this time?"

"I have not hear lof anything worth while," he replied, as he seated himself, and turned off a bottle of wine. "Business is getting dull."

"I think you manny to make it profitable, Capt in."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Simply this. That you appropriate the greater part of the spills to your own use. I wondered what because of all the money for a long time; now I know that it hads thee on a small island, where you have, in all probablity, a posity good hank started. I have trusted you, Mr. Green, with large amounts of money, thinking you we all act in good faith with the band; but you have deceived no, sir. So, for the present, I shall give the common at left your schooner to some one who has proved more weathy of my confidence, and give you a berth in the case, where I do not think you will get into mischief. And when you think you can behave yourself, you can come out, and not before."

"Reph Gray. I give you fair warning, that if you carry your threat into execution, you will regret it to the day of your death. I am not to be trided with by any nears; and I should think one as well acquainted with the sayou are, would be aware of that fact. What good wealt it do to put me in the cave? I should get out, and then you probably know what the consiquences would be."

"Do you think I am to be turned aside by such ille wer's a these, Mr. Granger? I know very well that it you at away, you would be bad enough to betray up. So I shall see to it you do not."

the injury a bank of pirates, who have committed crimes enough to hang them twice over."

is, you are a district to the name of party, or anything is. I think, take it all around, you are the worst out of a trade or a lever to with. Bur a level, boys; take Correct in a real give him a borth in the cave; and see to a, Mr. R. I. a. that you shot the door when you come a vev, in the late to cat our a qualitance at the first opport a pity."

It may, perhaps, be well to state the relationship that existed between Ralph Gray and Stephen Granger. The former, as the reader has probably already conjectured, was the commander of the much dreaded "Sa Valture," and the business of the latter was to hang about the principal ports to get information of any craft that went to sea with a valuable cargo, and then give notice to the other, who was always sure to cross the path of the unfortunate merchantman.

Granger had been trusted by his master, not only with the common I of the little schooner, but with the keeping of a large portion of the spoils accumulated. Unformately, however, in addition to the rest of his fallings, the passion for wealth stood predominant. Consequently, he had, from time to time, (unobserved, as he thought,) taken large amounts, and buried them on the island, as his been described, intending, as soon as he had a sufficient sun, to break with his friends, and with his ill gotten gains sook some place, remote as possible from the series of his end, life, and spend his days in the enjoyment of every place sure that money could purchase.

But at length, suspicion began to be entertained against him by his master, who, to test the matter, sent our with him Rollins, a man whom he could trust, to see what was going on. The result was the discovery already manationed.

But Rulph Gray, who was loth to lose one of his bray st men, thought if he confined him awaile, he wend be glad to return to his duty, and be really to at ing of faith afterwards.

The quarters to which Granger was confucted was simply a rough chamber in the rock, overhearing the marginary passage way leading to the bare me ris retreat. The was used by them as a stronghold in which to so receit the wealth. Though a natural cave, they had continue to enlarge it somewhat, and contracted a star contract for somewhat, and contracted a star contract for somewhat any time top; the opening to it could be obtained at any time by placing a large stone of rit, that it would not be likely to attract the atomic, should the island be visited, in their absence, by any strangers.

No other opening was visible, except on the side next to the water, where the wall had been pierced by a single port-hole, through which protruded the black muzzle of a heavy piece of ordnance, placed there to guard the entrance.

The heavy stone grated into its place, and Granger was alone. After venting his rage in the most bitter terms he was muster of, he sat down and began seriously to reflect on his situation. He knew Ralph Grey too well, to fear much for his life, but the disgrace he had been subjected to in the eyes of his companions was most humiliating to his haughty spirit, and he was well aware that though his life was safe, he would be kept a prisoner for an in lefinite length of time, if he got out at all. He determined to attempt his escape at all hazards, and immediately begin a careful search round the chamber for means to accomplish it. Suldenly the idea of a leap from the post-hole erosselhis mind. To strile across the cavern, seize the heavy gun carriage, and drag it back from the opening, was but the work of a moment. He thrust his head through the aperture and looked round; the moon had disperred behind a mass of dark clouds, and a light rain-storm was pattering against the rocks, rendering the night dark and encerles, but a favorable one to the projects of the imprisoned buccaneer.

Fall thirty feet b low him, the canal wenled its sorpentine way, and it would be necessary to swim quite a distance before a landing could be effected, owing to the recky nature of the shore. It required no small amount of courage to take a loop like that, in a dark night, without knowing how deep the water might prove, or what was the nature of the channel's bottom. But Granger did not be k courage. So, without stopping a moment to reflect on his rashness, or divest himself of a single article of dress, he spring from the port-hole, and described with a heavy plunge into the water, that for an tely proved de per than appearances indicated. He arose to the surface unharmed, and immediately struck out and commenced swimming, taking care to keen where to reck cast a broad shadow, that pretty effectably control-ed him from view.

After navigating in this way quite as long as was arrestly to his feelings, he succeeded in harling on the toughed bank, where his unexpected presence distribute the sharbers of a huge alligator, who shiel of into exactor and disappeared, without causing any regret of Granger's part, who now found hims if in a deast for st, sucremeled with all manner of poisonous repides and heasts of prev, without so much as a knife or pist d for defence. But he did not stop to weigh these matters in his mind; he resolutely pushed his way through the bushes, ke plug near the water to prevent getting lost, and one sionally was ling along its margin, when a thicket, through which it was impossible to force a path, barred his way.

Data rushed against his face, and various kinds of birds, seared from their nests, flow serea dag about his head. Huge dizards dropped from the branches of the rues in his path, and the vipor thrust forth his lock it tongue, and glared upon him with his glittering eyes as he passed near its retreat.

But nothing seemed to intimidate him. Hokept hell's on his course, and, after three hours of the most extreme exertion, reached the shore of the ocean.

From a little infl of bashes he draw a small boat, as i unless tationly put to sea. The boat had evidently be a placed there for an emergency like the process. It contained a colliber of water, some sea-biscuit and a gradular library draught of water, he applied himself to the ors, and the little boat shot over the waves have an row.

Three days from that time he was safe on the island of Cala, growing directly for the city of Havesa that he on the other side of the island, nearly opposite him. He parent has way with the same in the ighle energy, worthy of a better purpose.

35

But good motives had long since consol to attract the attention or govern the movements of Sephen Grancer. His limitate converge, the quick resolve in time of charger, the patience with which he endured hardships, and surmount delistacles that loset his path, but they been employed in a proper closer, might have won for him and hencrally name in history. As it was, his character presented a fearful example of what man is, when he has thrown off all monal restraint, and given full licence to every unholy passion.

But he had, in part, been a creature of circumstances. Early I ft an orphin, with none to care for him, no kind friend to fishina his youthful mind in such a way as to fit him for future usefulness, he had casily been ded astray, and had passed down the dangerous road that will surely conduct those who follow it to disgrace and heath. Among his lawless companions he was brave, during and blood-thirsty, but so utterly faithless and crued, that he was despised and avoided, even by them. He accomplished his journey in a surprisingly short time, and on his arrival, at Havana, engaged passage on board a vessel bound to New York, but with not the least intention of going there.

As the vessel would not sail before the expiration of a week, it gave him time to accountish one part of his plot, and that was the betrayal of Raph Gray and his associates.

This could not be done without considerable functional to this like the trusted to his own in remity to get out of a which by the night get into. It was quite eas at all to a whole a part of the second bruth to assist him in carryely out a part of the plans; and his knowledge of herman reference of the country of the fact that a like a print of the visibility would not a like a sec to New York, as one who would not a fact to part of any saving, provided the ways were good and his neck insured.

But the man of half a tarrivel when he demed it alvisible to begin operations with Captain Breaster, who was latenced to be used as a tool in a companing his designs—lecoy him into the danger to shield homself—and when he could be of no further use, take his life, if newsary, to get rid of him, and thereby insure silence. All these plans Stephen Granger thought over in his mind, and determined upon as coolly as he would in any ordenary business transaction.

So determined was he on revenging himself on Replie Gray, that every other feeling was subor limite to it. That must be accomplished, let the consequences be what they might.

Fortune seemed dispused to help him on to destruction with all possible speed, by assisting him to a complish the plans of his designing. As he was walking by a the street, after his interview with Captain Brewster, he observed on the other side of the way a person he was confident of having seen before. With a view of satisfying his curiosity on that point, he passed over and soon overtook the other, who proved to be the young Liverment who had saved the life of Ethel Gray, a short time before.

The recognition was mutual, but it did not happen to be part of Granger's policy to renew his acquaintance with Menest Howard at that time. So, without writing to give the other a chance to speak, he passed on without appearing to notice him; and then sublenly turning around, and retracing, as though returning for something he had forgotten, seemed for the first time to get a fair view of his face. Lying him for a moment with a bolt of uncertainty, he approached and inquired, in broken Daglish, so mixed up with Spanish, that any one would have supposed the latter his native tongue:

"If he did not belong on board the ship Winler?"

"Yes, sir," answered Howard, confisedly, "but excuse me, you so much remarks an arquinterize of min, that I was about a ldressing you by his name.".

"It is stronge I should so nouly resemble your friend as to be mistaken for him, but such similarities are often met with."

"Teat's true! but in your case I can hardly convince myself you are not the acquaintance I mentioned, but as he was an American, and you appear to be a Spaniard, it is certain you cannot be the same person. So allow me to inquire what is the nature of your business with me."

As the jurgon assumed by Grunger would be quite unforchistic, we shall take the liberty of translating it into plain English.

After intimating to Lieutenant Howard that he had something important to communicate, the latter invited him to his quarters, and on their arrival, expressed his willingness to attend to what he had to say.

"I believe," sail Granger, coolly seating himself. "that the Windsor has been cruising in this vicinity for some time, in search of a famous piratical vessel, known as 'The Sea Vulture.'"

"That is true! and if you have any knowledge of where she is to be found, and feel disposed to make it known, I assure you it will be welcome intelligence, and my government will not fail to rewar! you in a liberal manner."

"I do not seek or wish reward; the only object I have in making this disclosure, is a desire to benefit the public, in assisting to rid the seas of a lawless freebooter."

on my assistance, I assure you. We have been cruising that this six months for this follow, and not even got so much as a sight of him yet. We only got in here a day or two ago, and Captain Clinton is quite undetermined what course to pursue in future."

ow. I learn tell you what I know about this chap, at how I learned it. Something the six mort's again to an a pressed from New Orleans to this place, the yessel I was on board of was pursual by the Sea Valuer. You have probably heard that the captain of the couff sill on trouble the crows unless resistance is attempted, and this fact is so generally known, that very few merchantmen who have the misfortune to fall into his lands attempt any resistance, but let him help himself quistly to relativer he wasts. Well, our captain and value on board, he went on his way, but compelled me to accompany him, in hopes, as I afterwards found, of inducing me to join his band. This I would not do. So he conflucted me to his headquarters, and confined me in a cave, where he keeps his booty, with the pleasant assurance that when I acceded to his terms, I might come out, and not before. But, fortunately, I managed to make my escape."

And he went on to give a brief account of the manner in which he escaped from the pirates, to all of which Howard listened with profound attention, and sat for a long time apparently lost in reflection.

"Where is the headquarters of the gang?" said Howard, at last, looking up to his companions.

"It is on a little island, near the southern coast of ter, stating that my father, who lives in New York, is dengerously sick, and not expected to recover; and wishes me to lose no time in coming home. I could not go without making known to you what I have just stated, and in that way discharge my duty to my fellow-man. But now that is done, and filial duty must commence. But I can give you the exact locality of the island, and you will have no difficulty in finding it."

"I suppose you would be willing to go with us as pilot, and then you can have a chance to pay off your score with the rascals."

"Well, I suppose that will answer every purpose, though it would be much better to have a pilot on such a cruise, who is well acquainted with the ground. But won't the fellow be off when he fluds you have given him the dolg, for he must know you would betray him, if you ever got where you could."

"That will depend altogether upon how the captain happens to feel about it. He may clear out, or he may stay and defend his camp to the last. Now, my advice is, that you should get three or four of your ship.nates, and just pay the place a visit; you could use the same boat that I did, which is probably where I left it, on the beach; and then you could pull over to the island, when, under cover of night, you could work your way into the camp; and if they were gone, you would know it, and be on the look-out for them somewhere else; and if they were not, you could get a better idea of the situation of the place than I can give you. And, after all, it would not be a very dangerous undertaking. I have engaged in many a more dangerous one, just for the fun of the thing in my time."

20

"It might be done, that is true. How long is it since you left there?"

"About a week."

"Well, I will consult with my commander, and if he thinks it best to send out a party to reconnoitre, I will be in for it at all events. I am obliged to you for your information, and will be happy to have your company for supper."

"I thank you, but time presses with me, and I must be off. We may possibly meet again some time, when I am not in quite as much of a hurry. So good-bye, for the present."

"Tius far all goes well," said Granger to himself, as he walked away. "That chap, though, is almost a fool, or he would have seen through my disguise, but I fancy you played your part pretty well, Stephen; you don't usually fall in what you undertake."

With such thoughts coursing through his mind, he arrived at the vessel of Captain Brewster, and was soon engaged in a private conference with the last-named individual.

CHAPTER IV.

The escape of Granger from the cave caused no little stir among his lawless companions, as the reader will readily conjecture. When Rollins, visiting it in the morning, found it empty, he stood for some time utterly conformed. True, the open port hole showed the manner of the prisoner's exit, but he could not perceive how a person could take a leap like that and escape with a whole neck, and he was also confident that no one but such a reckless character as Granger would attempt it.

However, he concluded he must have sustained serious injury to be able to get any great distance from this camp, and doubted not but that they should find him in the neighborhood, in no condition for running away very fast. He therefore lost no time in advising R dph Grey of what had happened, and intimated the propriety of a strict search being instantly made.

Gray was as much surprised as his follower, and at once saw the necessity of finding Granger immediately, as there was no knowing what he might do if left at large. Orders were given to search the vicinity thoroughly, and a large party started on the expedition.

The whole day was passed in traversing and re-traversIng the forest, but, of course, without success; and at lost, wearied with their us less labor, they returned, and reper ed themselves to their community, who was by no menus satisfied with the turn affairs in ditaken. The pisribility that Granger had escaped watallife, and had really found means to quit the island, caused him more newsiness than he chose to express, even to his confident, Rallins, who was now summoned in council.

"What do you think now, Rollins?" sail Grey, "do you suppose it possible that Steve has left the island?"

"If he was anyhoody but him, Captain Grey, I should say it was out of the question, but he always would go where no other man could, and if he is off, as I think he is, he will be sure to send us company that we could get along without."

"I know that very well; I know if he has gone, we are betraved. But how could be get off without one of the boats? and they are all here?"

"If he could not get a boat, he would swim. I tell you, Capiain, that when Steve Granger sets out to go anywhere, he will go, and all creation can't stop him. Now I am just as sure that he has managed to get the Island of Cuba as if I had been there; and, anyway, we had better be prepared for anything that comes. Nothing like throwing out an anchor to the windward, when a fellow is drifting on a lee shore like this."

"I don't know what we can do, without we cut and desend this place."

"I suppose that is the surest course; but I don't like the idea of running, very well."

Better do that than stay here, and get all our necks into the laster. I, for one, would not like a place under a frigate's yard-arm. No! I think the best way is to clear out, bug and baggage, and give this hole a wide berth, un il this business blows over. We can leave one or two men to keep watch, and let us know when we can return in safety."

.. So be it; and if you wish, I will stay, and let you know what is going on."

eth r man, for I b lieve I can trust you. Keep a sharp I ok-out, that don't let any of those bloody men of-war's men get hold of you, if they should happen to drop in here while I am gone. I shall be off, then, myself as soon as possible, though I do not see any danger in staying two weeks longer. But I have nothing to do, and may as well be going, and may hap I shall find game; as for that craft that Steve commanded, I will send her off on a short deck; but as soon as matters get strightened out a little, that will be your berth."

Two hours later, the Black Vulture and its tender were under way, passing slowly down the narrow channel so often referred to, and, in the course of an hour, was standing out to sea, while the island, that so short a time before presented a scene of merry mirth, was now quiet and described, with the exception of Bill Rollins, who remained to keep watch in the absence of his master.

Scarcely had Stephen Granger with lrawn from the quarters of Lieutenant Howard, when his place was supplied by a man wearing the same uniform as the latter, but evidently some ten years his senior. His face was pale, and to all appearances he had lately recovered from a severe spell of sickness.

"Why Mulgrave, is that you!" exclaime! Howard, starting up and warmly grasping the han! that the other extended to him. "They told me, yester by, that you would not be out this two weeks, and Captain Canton has been in a tantram all day about it."

"It would have been more than two weeks before I got out, if that landlubber Doctor had been allowed to have his own way about it. But I have been cooped up as long as I am going to be, and when the old Wandsor sails again, I am with her, sick or well. I believe if I had gone to sea instead of staying here, I should have been about long ago."

The newcomer, who was addressed as Mr. Mulgrave, held the commission of first Lieuten int on board the same craft to which Howard belonge l. Some three mont is before he had been seriously injured by the accident defiling of a spar, and his case taking an unfavorable turn, he was landed at Hawma, and placed under the case of a noted physician. Between Mulgrave and Howard there existed a firm, unchanging friendship that had sprung up many years before, and time seemed rather to strengthen the tie that bound the "brothers in arms" together.

For the last ten years they had sailed in the same vessel. They had stood side by side amil the thun lers of battle, and had, together, faced death in every form. Coasequently it was not strange that their friendship should not be of that kind so prevalent at their ages, that is only intended to be short-lived plant, to flourish only while the parties continued in the same position in which they were when it was formed.

This, we are happy to say, is not always the character of friendship now-a-days. Occasionally we find the good, old-fashioned article, that will stick by you through thick and thin, the same when misfortune hung like a dark cloud over you, that it was when you inhabited a lighter atmosphere. Such we prize; but it is getting scarcer, hardly oftener to be met with than angel's visits. Excuse this brief departure from the subject, and we will go on with our yarn.

"I wish," said Howard, after they had seated themselves, "that you had come in a few moments before you did, for I have just had a curious visitor; he had not been gone but a short time when you came in."

"Who was he, pray, and what did he want?"

"As to who he was, you know as well as I do, but his lusiness is easily explained. It was nothing more or less than to tell me where the Black Vulture is to be found."

Well, that is good news, anyhow. It will make Captain Clinton good-natured a week if he can only extenthat fellow; he has been looking for him so lock without su case, that the old man's stock of patience. (that was rever large, by the way.) is getting pretty well example to But what kind of looking chap was it that broag it this interesting piece of Intelligence?"

"That is just the strangest part of the story. You reco'll coof hearing me speak of a fellow that I say at St.
Augustine, by the name of Granger, (or at least, that was what he called his name,) when I was there a short time ago?"

"Yes! It was the chap that got shipwrecked with his lady love, was it not?"

The same one. Well! The man that brought me the news about the Black Vulture so nearly resumble! Granger that, before I heard him speak, I would have sworn that they were one and the same person."

"And, in all probability, they were. He might have had reasons of his own for not wishing you to recognize him."

"No! that is impossible; for Granger was a Yanker to the backbone, and this one was a Spaniar I, who could not jubber English enough to make his story intelligible; if I had not been able to talk Spanish myself, his visit would not have been worth much."

Howard then proceeded to give an exact account of the conversation that had passed between hims it and Granger, and ended by asking Mulgrave's opinion about going to reconnoitre the buccancers' camp.

"Captain Canton will, of course, decide that matter" answered Mulginve, "but, according to my notion, it would be a good idea. It would be rather a fool-like ly job to take a vessel into a place like that, of the localities of which you know nothing, except from the say-so of a stranger, who, after all, may only be plotting to decay us into danger; and if he were not, I should think it best to learn something more than we now know, before we astack them. I don't like this working in the dark. If I can't see my enemy, I want, at least, to know where he is. That is exactly my opinion. But perhaps we might as well go and talk with Captain Cinton about it, for we can't come to any conclusion until we do."

The two officers arose, and, having settled with their limitord, they walked down towards the mole. Our allies it, they stepped into a boat, and were soon on the deck of the Windsor, where their presence causal solar limbs supprise, as Mulgrave was supposed by all to be yet confined to his bed, and Howard having gone on some on therety, they could not conjecture want had bear thing back before his leave of absence had expired. No time was lost in acquainting Captain Clinton with the information they had obtained. And as Mulgrave had anticipated, the simple fact that he had learned something definite concerning the whereabouts of his wilv energy, put the old weather-beaten officer in the best possible humor.

He concurred with Mulgrave and Howard that it would be a wise precaution to send out a small party to see for the exact situation of the buccaneers' camp, to learn the stringth of the force, and to make other observations that would be of essential use in case they concluded to attack them in their present retreat. Howard (by his own request) was appointed to head this expedition, and was permitted to chose his companions.

No sooner was the object of the undertaking made known among the crew, generally, than volunteers for the service stepped forward by the score. Its chose but three, however; but they were noted among their fellows for personal bravery, and their skill in executing commissions of a similar kind.

And, with the young Lieutenant for a guide, who was proverbial on board for coolness in the most dangerous expedicion, in addition to the rash during of his churacter, it was conceded by all hands that all that was possible for man to accomplish would be done.

Thomas Allen, Richard Stan lish, and Joshua Sumpson, (for such were the names of the men who were to accompany Howard,) were instructed to be ready at an early hour the following morning, to start on their alventure. It was arranged that they should provide themselves with loses to convey them to the other side of the island, where if their informer's story was true, they would find the boat used by him, where he had left it on the beach.

The first grey light of morning found our party not only in the saddle, but some distance from the city, and fairly stated on their cruise. They were all furnished with horses, except old Joshua Sampson, who, unable to procure one, best rode as contrary a mule as ever refused point blank to comply with the wishes of its master.

Suppose was a regular old salt, and probably, for the past forty years, he had not spent six months on shore, and the awkwardness with which he managed the stab-born heast caused no small amount of merriment among his frien!s.

"I tell ye what 'tis, Mr. Howard," he sail, "of all the hard steering crafts I ever did see, this critter is the worst by all odds; and if she should happen to get shoved off a point or two, I might as well try to move this ere island, as to get her back again."

"Well, Josh I" replied Howard, laughing; "if you can't keep in our wake, we shall have to get out a line and take your craft in tow."

The course that Howard was pursuing, was a little west of so ith from the city of Havana. Though the island in that place was quite narrow, it took some time to cross it, owing to the somewhat wild and rugged nature of the country through which they had to pass. On the evening of the second day, however, they came in sight of the Orian; and, after a little trouble, found the boat lying, as Granger had left it, on the sand.

"It is good for one's eyes, maties," said Sampson, as he slipped off his animal, "to get sight of a boot and salt water again; but what in nature folks can want to use such critters as that blusted beast for, is more than I know."

Having delivered himself of this speech, the old sail of turned his attention to getting the bout really for sea, while the other members of the party went in quest of some place where they could leave their steeds in safety. One was at last found. An old fisherman who lived near by, agreed to take charge of them until their owners should return. This difficulty removed, the voyagers put to sea.

The passage proved rather stormy; but all being exparienced seamen, it was accomplished without accident. It was a dark, feggy, unpleasant evening; and after search-

Ing for the channel described by Gringer, until their patience was pretty well exhausted, they at last found it, and began their silent ascent,

It was no very envisible operation for four men, in an open boat, to sell holdly into a place where they had every reason to expect a hand of blood thirsty desperators were larking, who would not feel disposed to treat visitors with much courtesy.

But little they thought or cared about that. They kept on; and soon the rough, natural fortress boared sull lealy up before them. They rested on their ours for a short time, to ascertain if they were discovered; but all was silent as the chamber of death; so they pulled gently forward, through the narrow passage-way, and, in a few moments, were floating on the still waters of the forest harbor.

A single glance showed them that the "Black Vulture and its Tender" were not there; and as there was no apprenance of life within the camp, Howard determined to had and give the place a thorough examination. As this was no very extensive affair, it did not take them long to accomplish it.

"Well, boys," sall Howard, as they walked toward the boat after fluishing their search, "I fancy these free-thinking gentlemen are all off, and have left us in full possession of their camp, that, to all appearance, can't contain much to pay us for our trouble. They had quite a snug berth here, but rather out of the way, for my taste."

"If we could blunder into that cave which the Spaniard tell you about, Mr. Howard, we might find something worth while," said Allen.

I do not think they would leave much plander here; for they must have known the Spaniard would betray them. But there is no use staying here any longer; it's as gloomy as a church-yard at midnight; let us be going."

The proceedings of Howard and his party had not been entirely unseen; at least one pair of eyes had watched them, and one pair of ears had gathere i most of their conversation; in ot er words, Rollins, true to his trast, had kept vigilant watch in the absence of his master. He have I with surprise the young Englishman speak of receiving information concerning their camp from a Spaniar I—far, as the reader already knows, Granger was the only person from whom the buccaneers feared betray d—and the knowledge of a plurality of traitors was anything but agreeable to this silent spy.

new enemy could be, without coming to any satisfactory conclusion—as there were several Spaniards connected with the band.

"I believe the devil has described his own followers!" he muttered, as he descended from his post of observation:

"Here is another snake in the grass it seems—one of those Spaniards, I suppose—he will be sare to heat up Steve Granger, and between them they will plot out our certain descruction. Carse the lack. One thing, they won't get hold of Rulph Grey just yet. I am glad he went away when he did."

along a narrow shelf in the rock, overlanging the channel, anxious to obtain a nearer view of the departing bod, that was slowly making its way through the narrow passage, and would soon be directly beneath him. It many places the shelf was intersected by jutting points, around which it was impossible to pass, without the assistance of tough bushes that sprung from the crevice in the rock, as if on purpose to aid him in his perilous journey.

But it certainly somed as if the Pates were in league against the buccaneers—for, while passing one of the points, a bush, on which Rollins had trusted all his weight, came up by the roots, and down comes the man, splash into the water, almost under the bow of Howard's boat.

*What in the none of wonder was that?" Fail Air. starting up quic., and looking intentity at the s, of where the fallen man had disappeare!, "I'll bet my eyes that it's one of those chaps we have been looking for, and he has taken this tumble while trying to get a look at his visitors. There, he has come up, and is awimming like all creation toward the shore. Alloy! shipmate, wait a minute and we can give you a better berth than you have got there, and among respectable men into the bargain." In another moment, the boat was alongside of the swimmer, who was quickly hauled aboard, disarmed, and stretched at length on the bottom, when he was politely reminded that he was expected to remain quiet.

"Now, give way with a will, boys!" said Howard, "for I should not wonder much if there were more birds of this fellow's stamp where he comes from."

"If there is, we can accommodate one or two more of them with a berth, by stowing them a little," answered Allen, laughing.

"Yes, fill them up, one right on top of the other, and then we could take a cargo of the rascals," said Standish.

"And they are in pretty good demand at Havana just now," put in Suppose, with a grin. "Suppose you question that chap a little, Mr. Howard, and maybe you can learn where his skipper has gone."

Rollins at first refused to say anything that would give a clue to his master's present whereabouts; but he at length intimated that Ralph Gray had abandoned his camp, because he feared betrayal from one of his men who had described, and hinted that he might be found somewhere in the vicinity of St. Augustine.

This was enough for Howard, who rightly conjecture I that the baccaneer intended to hang about among the Balama Islands, and that neighborhood, until he hard some report from his camp; and, as he had the watchen an who had been left there, in his own possession, he thought it probable that the first intelligence that reached Captain Grey, in regard to his island, would be conveyed in the Windsor.

T e voi us between the two islands was accomplished as seen as it could have been expected. The party landed in fine spirits; and flading their horses sate, they puil the old fisherman for his trouble, and prepared to continue their journey—but now a question arose as to how the prisoner should be transported the rest of the way.

"Let him stow himself away astern of me," said Sunn-son, who was once more seated on his mule, "I guess this long-cared animal can make along with two of us, and maybe she will sail better with more ballist."

Rollins obeyed, and was assisted to his sent; but no sooner did the creature feel the additional weight, than, with a loud snort, she dashed off down a steep decliving, with a velocity that put it entirely out of the rider's power either to check or guide her in the least.

"Hold on to the critter's tail, you bloody this, or you will be slidin' off for'red," showed Sunpson, who, will his arms round the mule's neck, was enleavoring to prevent a collision between himself and mother curts. But at that moment, as if with the design of getting rid of her load, the creature stopped so sullenly, that both the mean shot forward over its head, and remained half-baried in the drifting sand.

The old salt scrambled up and grasped the prisoner firmly, who was about taking adventage of the accident to make his escape, and sung out to his companions:

"Bar a hand here, shipmates, my craft has fetched up, and all hands are overboard."

"What's the matter?" exclaimed Howard, when he reached the scene of disaster, "and what are you doing there in the sand, Sampson?"

broke my neck; and I hope never to see blue water as in if I steer her the rest of the way to town, so ye may just lish that bloody pirate onto her deck, and if she caps as and breaks his neck it won't do any harm; but, as for me, I shall foot it, for I want to get back alive."

Finding that the old sailor was resolute in his determination of walking, in preference to trusting himself outlier mule again. Howard gave orders to scene the prisoner to way, they proceeded, occasionally letting Suppon rest limself on one of the horses, and in due time they arrived safe and sound in Havana.

A few hours leter, a very unusual stir was observed on board the Wandsor, and the order to get under way was distinctly heard by the idlers on the mole. In a moment, the yards were manned, every sail was dropped at the same instant, and sheeted home. The colossal mass begun to move slowly through the water, and, before dark, had disappeared in the distance.

CHAPTER V.

The same day, and nearly the same hour, that the Windsor left the port of Havana, the brig Sea Board, Captain Brewster, was standing under short canvas, near the small sandy island, where, on a former occasion, the realer has seen Stephen Granger, engaged in depositing his money for safe keeping. The last-named in lividad now walked the deck of the brig in earnest conversation with its commander; and, it was evident, from the clance which the two men took towards that insignificant bit of land, that it was at that moment the subject of their thoughts.

"I suppose you have arrived at some conclusion in regard to my proposal, Captain Brewster," said Granger, a dressing his companion. "There is the bank that holds my money, and all that is necessary on your part to secure a pretty little shot in the locker, is to come to an understanding with me about the chartering your craft for a few days. What do you say, man?"

"I don't like the job very well, Mr. Granger, though I ain't over particular what I do if the pay is only rig."; and I must say, that you offer up what I call has been but a man must have some regard for his honor you know."

"Honor! ha, ha, ha-I like to hear a man like you talk about honor. Why, you don't even know what the word means!"

"I know this much, sir, that it ain't a very protect of work to carry a young woman off against her will."

"How many times have I got to tell you, that there is no force to be used in the affair? I fancy the girl will be willing enough to take a cruise with me."

"Then you will use some rascally deception—for you told me no longer ago than yester lay that the girl was i't overfond of you—and if she ain't, all creation couldn't make her marry ye."

"And pray, tell me, what makes you think I wanted to marry her? I thought I told you that the only object I had in carrying her off was to revenge myself on her father, who has given me reason enough to hate him; and hate him I do, and will while he and I live in the same world."

"I know you told me all that, Mr. Granger, but did you think I was fool enough to believe it; young chaps like you don't often clear out with pretty gals to char off old scores again someboly. If you don't mean to marry her, you are fixin' up some mischief, of that I am certain."

"And what if I am? Whose business is it, I would like to know? "At all events, when I ask your opinion in regard to my affairs, it will be time enough for you to give it; but there is no use in talking longer; you don't we to do do job, and there are plenty that do—so let the matter rest there."

Captain Bows.er was not the man to let two thousand dellars sup through his fingers, just because the manner in which it was to be earned was dishonorable, unmonly and wrong. So, after musing over the subject a moment, ho replied:

Well, I 'spose I might as well lead you a hand, for if I don't, some one clse would and get the cash; but I west you to take a part in another affair of this kind."

doing it—which is not likely. Oh! I understand you perfectly, Coptain Brewster; you are a very honorable man; but still a little money will make you do anything short of murder; and I guess you could be hired to do that, if it wasn't for an awkward law they have now-a-days, that makes it dangerous for a man to play that game. But now for the gold! Let go the mud-hook, hoist out a boat, and we will be after it.

This was quickly done, the two villains entered the boat, and in a very short time both were standing on the beach.

Stephen Granger had no idea of letting his companion know the exact spot where his hoard was conceiled—for he was not ready to remove the whole—and had no very high opinion of Brewster's good faith; so, as on a form roccasion, he declined the company of the worthy captain, and pointedly requested him to keep watch in the boat, while he went to remove the deposit. This the other did not like to do; but he had learned enough of his employer's character to convince him that he was not the man with whom it was wise to trifle. So he quietly remained, and Granger passed over the little sand-hall, and was soon out of sight.

Fifteen minutes had hardly elapsed when Granger returned, bringing with him the identical bag that he had placed there but a short time before. This he opened, and displayed to the greedy eyes of Brewster the gold he so much coveted.

Brewster extended his hand to grasp the prog, but was promptly foiled by the other, who remarked, with the utmost coolness, as he cumningly slipped the bug into his pocket:

"I guess I will take charge of this matter for the present; it will be time enough for you to claim your pay when your work is done. I should not like to trust you with it before."

"And what reason have I to believe that you will pay me then, Mr. Granger? It seems to me as though I have as good a right to suspect your fair dealing as you have to distrust mine. I only want things done fair; so, if you will pay half down I will trust to your honor for the other half."

"I do not pretend to have any honor, Captain Brews-ter! But you will not get a dollar of your pay until the lady is landed at St. Jago! And I want you to remember that I carry pistols, and those who know me think I am a pretry good shot; and, furthermore, if I see anything squally on your part, I shall lodge a bullet in your head.

"So, if these arrangements are to your mind, we will go on board, and be off."

C prain Brewster had no alternative, but to submit with the best grace he could.

He had gone too far to think of retracting; so he gave a reluctant consent, and the two men returned to the Sca Bird.

CHAPTER VL.

We must now turn our attention to Glen's Cottage and its immates. Something over a year had elapsed since R dpn Grey had visited his family; and, in spite of her efforts to feel easy, Ethel had begun to entertain an ill-defined feeling of alarm for his safety that almost amounted to a presentiment of coming evil. Though there was nothing in the mere fact of his absence to occasion uncasiness, (for he had been away much longer at a time.) but lately she had permitted her mind to dwell on very little circum stances connected with her father's prolonged a chain of reasoning that convinced Echel that something—she knew not what—was wrong.

She teared that her parent had allowed himself to be engaged in some contriband trade; but, a suspicion of his real business never, for a moment, entered her innocent heart. Her mind was too pure to entertain the those at that it was possible that one to whom she gave the tile of father was engaged in actual piracy; and daily a prayer went up to the Throne of Grace for the wan lever's safe return to his home, and to the path of virtue, if he had strayed from it.

It was a beautiful afternoon in the early part of autumn, that Ethel Grey sat by an open win low that commutated a view of the little cove at the foot of the garden; the view apparently occupied in contemplating the seems but as her, she was in reality thinking of her absent father, and wishing she could see his boat, at that moment—is such that seen it many times—pass up the cove, and had at the little pier.

Suddenly, she saw a figure energing from the hards and walk toward the house. As it approached, she recognized Stephen Granger. A more unwelcome visitor could not, at that instant, present himself, and she was about withdrawing from the window, when he entered the door, that happened to stand open, and sood before her.

"My business must excuse me for again intruding upon you," he began in a sad voice. "I am sorry to say that I am the bearer of very unpleasant news from your father, who is, I fear, by this time"—

"Dend?" interrupted Ethel, starting up, and gazing at the other in affright.

"No; not dead, but past all hope of recovery, I fear. When I left him, his death was daily, almost hourly, expected."

"And now he must be dead. Oh! my father, why could I not have known of this in time to reach you while you yet lived?"

"Calm yourself, Miss Gray, you may yet have time to reach your father's bedside before he breathes his last. I came on purpose to be your escort, and by the special request of your father, who wished, if possible, to see you once more; I have lost no time in coming, and have arranged it in such a way that I shall have no trouble in returning."

E act Grey was not the one to linger, when summoned to the death-bed of a parent; but the blow had been so suiden, so unexpected, that, for a time, she was quite unable to collect her scattered senses, or decide on any course of future action. It never occurred to her that Granger might be deceiving her in this matter, though she had not a very high opinion of his honesty, yet she never dreamed that he was bad enough to invent such a story; and the currently villain saw that she was completely duped by his well acted serrow, consequently he had nothing to fear. It split had worked to his entire satisfaction.

When Diel recovered in a measure from the first shock that the un xpected intelligence had given her feelings, she sought the sympathy and counsel of Silis

She found the good old man in his little room with his Bible open before him. He closed the book when she entered, and she at once made him acquainted with the dreadful intelligence she had received.

"I am afraid, Miss Ethel," he said, when he had hear I her story, "that Mr. Granger is deceiving us; but for the world I wouldn't hinder you a minute, if I thought Capen' Grey was really so sick."

"Mr Granger could not deceive me on such a subject as this, Silas."

"I hope not, Miss Ethel; but men sometimes do drealful wicked things when they have not the feer of God before their eyes; for you see, without that, it is man's na er to do.jist as bad as he can."

"But. Slas, Mr. Granger would be a monster in human shape, if he could wantonly tell me that my father was dying, when there was no truth in it."

"I know it; and I am afraid that he is jist that thing you named."

"Well, what can I do? I cannot look into his heart to see if he is sincere; and if my father is really sick and should die, and I refuse to visit him, I should never forgive myself."

"True, child, you can't tell whether he is honest or not; and I don't see any other way, but to go, and trust in Gol to keep you from danger; and He will do it, if you ak Him in faith. It is jist as easy for Him to watch over you on the great ocean, as here in this house. His alleye looks over all the world at the same time; and His alleye can't go beyond the bounds set them."

CHAPTER VIL

Two hours later Ethel bade adieu to the home of her childhood, little tuinking she was leaving it for the last time; yet, so it proved. Morton accompanied them as far as St. Angustine on their journey, and saw them safe on board the Sea Bird. He then turned his steps homeward, with a Leavy heart, and very gloomy forebodings.

Everything on board the Sea Bird was arranged for a Lasty departure; and Captain Brewster, who was well Pleased with the quiet aspect of things, lost no time in getting his craft under way. The best state-room that the vessel afforded was appropriated to the use of Miss Gray, where the was left the greater part of the time to herself. Now, when Grauger had his victim fairly in his power, he had not the courage to unfold his base designs to the unsuspecting muiden, who had been wiled into his net, but still looked upon him as acting in perfect good faith; never, for a moment, suspecting the deep plot into which she was cutangled.

Occasionally, even Granger's seared conscience reproached him with the ruin he was working; but it was a momentary pang, quickly banished from his mind, and he laughed, with a kind of fiendish delight, when he reflected how faithfully he had carried out his plans of revenge.

Twenty tour hours after leaving St. Augustine, the Sea Bird was making her way through the group of Bahama Islands.

Though the craft was in a rather out-of-the way place fer a merchantman, she was not alone; a strange sail bad just been reported from mast head, that was bearing down upon them, with the evident intention of cultivating their acquaintance; and Granger, glass in hand, Lad ascended the main shrouds to ascertain, if possible, who their neighbor might be. A few moments seemed to satisfy his curiosity—for he hastily descended, and, walking at to where Captain Brewster was standing, said, in a low voice:

"We have a troublesome fellow out youder, captain! that craft is no other than the Sea Vulture, which you have probably beard of before; and I believe a chap of your stamp don't like to full in with her very well."

"What on earth is to be done. Mr. Granger, unless we can show them a clean pair of heels? We are done for."

"That's a fact, captain! and you can rest easy about runring away from that fellow; the craft don't float that can do it."

"Then I shall lose my vessel, my two thousand dollars, and as like as not my life. I wish you had been in Davy Jones' locker before I ever see ve."

"Dun't work yourself into a passion, captain, for I think we can get out of the scrape yet. I am well acquainted on this cruising ground, and know every passage perfectly. Now, you see that channel between these two little islands ahead.

"Well, if you can reach that before they overhand us, we can go through; and he can't follow us, for he draws full three feet more water than we do; and before he can turn and stand round on the other side to stop us, we shall get so much the start, that we can reach Havana before he can get within gun-shot; but it will be a neck or nothing race; for at the rate he is going now, we shall have to pass within range of his guns. However it's cur only alt reaching; tet's be at it. I will take the wheel myself."

Every inch of canvas that the brig's yards could spread was now hoisted to the wind. The voyagers had the satisfaction of seeing their speed increase a sterially, that the was evident that the Vulture was gaining upon them hand over hand.

"I wish you would take the wheel; I want to step below a minute," said Granger to one of the men.

The man complied, and the other disappeared down the companion-way, and knocked at the door of Ethel's state-room. He was admitted, and, without preamble, Legan:

"I have had news for you, Miss Gray! We are chased by a pirate, and I think we shall be overhauled."

Ethel started and turned pale, but said nothing, and the villain went on:

In the first place, then 'I have deceived you; your father is as we'l as ever he was, for what I know; and, furthermore, he is the commander of the very craft that is now pursuing us; or in other words, Miss, he is the most notorious free-booter that sails these seas."

"And. Mr Grarger," exclaimed Ethel, indignantly, "do you expect me to believe this after you have confessed that the story of my futher's illness was a falsehood—a base, wicked talsehood?"

"Believe or not as you like, ma'am; it's all the same to me; but probably in the course of an hour, Ralph Gray and his nen will have possession of this vessel; however, that is nothing here or there; my object in visiting you, is to explain my notive for decoying you away as I have. It was simply this: I was in the employ of your father, and should have been now had he not, through some when, taken away my vessel, and confined me as though I were a slave.

An insuit is something that I will not take from any man; reverge is my disposition. I love it; and I will follow an eventy to the furthest end of creation to obtain it. Well, by that act. Raiph Gray made me his enemy; and, by way of reverge, I betrayed him. The thoulands of the law are already on his track; escape is impossible. But this was not enough; I determined to decoy you away, and heave you in a place of screey, and then inform him of what I led done and have the pleasure of seeing him die on the pitchet, without ever knowing the fate of his only child. I never interact to harm you; my plea was, when your father was dead, to carry you back to Glen's Cottage, and leave you there unmolested. But that plan is likely to be foiled: so prepare to die; for the moment Ralph Gray gets possession here. I will take your life in his very presence, and then my revenge will be completed.

" You have time for preparation-improve it."

Granger now turned to leave the cabin; and the victim of his cruel perfidy fell insensible to the floor. He gaze I for a moment on the pale but lovely features, and a feeling akin to pity crept into his heart of stone; but it soon gave place to the old passions. He hesitated no longer; and, stepping to the companion-way, was quickly on deck. Scarcely had he taken his place at the wheel, when a jet of smoke puffed from the bow of the Vulture, followed by the heavy booming of the thirty-two pound shot that whistled past them, and fell into the sea, hardly twenty feet to the windward.

"That is a polite way of asking us to lay to. Captain Brewster," said Granger, coolly; "and, in my opinion, we are in a very bad fix. They are close upon us now, and they understand how to trim a gun."

"So much for having anything to do with a bloody villain. I expected some confounded scrape of this kind. Look out! look out there! blastytheir eyes, they have fixed us now."

The exclamation was caused by a second shot from the Vulture, followed by a crash of the iron missile through the rigging.

The main most tottered for a moment, and then fell with a splash in the ocean, leaving the disable lengt to rock about at the mercy of the waves; and in less than half an hour the Black Vulture was alongside, and fast to the Sca Bird.

Notwithstanding the utter felly of the undertaking, Granger, with his usual hardihood determined to make a disperate resistance; and the crew, roused to courage by his example, thecked round him, determined to defend every incomof plank in the deck at the risk of their lives. They were not kept long in idleness. The buccaneers crowded over the low bulwark, and the work of carnage began. The crew of the Sea Bird fought with the courage of desperation. The dock ran rad with blood and was crowded with the bolies of the dead and dying; but they were overpowered at last, and threw down their arms and plunged into the sea, or stood with stern resignation awaiting their fate. Seeing this, Ralph Gray ordered the men to desist and attend to their own wounded, while he sat down on a gun-carriage, and attempted to bind up a terrible gash in his forebead.

Wille so engaged, Granger rushed past him and made for the companion-way, shouting:

'Come on. Ralph Gray, if you want to see the winding-up of this game! I have betrayed you, but I am not fully revenged yet."

Gray had recognized Granger when he first boarded the vessel and had made every effort in his power either to capture or kill bim; he did not care much which; and now, when he saw him make for the companion-way, the thought flished across his mind that he intended to blow up the trig.

He sprang forward and with one bound reached the bottom of the steps, where a glance sufficed to show the afterpart Granger had spoken of. On the further side of the cabin lay the inanimate form of his child; before her stood the tiger hearted field, pistol in hand, awaiting his entrance, to finish the tragedy.

"This is the winding-up of the play." he said, with a smile of malignant triumph, as he raised the pistol to his eye and pulled the trigger.

But he was foiled in his last plan of revenge. The pistol had simply flashed, and Ethel was unhar not. With a yell of rage he dashed the weapon that had deceived him to the floor, and faced his enemy with a look of savage definace. Gray saw through the whole plot in an instant.

Now, devil in human shape, it sin: turn," he thundere i, as he drew a pistol from his belt and glanced along the polished barrel.

The next moment a sharp report rung through the cabin, and Stephen Granger, with a muttered curse on his lips, fell backward, dead.

For a moment Gray bent over the fallen man, and launhel, as he marked the expression of his features, now fixed in death:

The same haughty curl was on his lip; the same savage lustre shone in his half-closed eyes, as though the spirit that had hurried him on to desperation still lingered in its earthly abode, both to abundon a realm where it had so long reigned supreme sovereign.

CHAPTER VIII.

The report of the pistol brought Ethel to consciousness. She raised her head, and gazed wildly around the cabia, until her eyes rested on the face of her father. Her first impulse was to spring to his arms and express her delight at this unexpected meeting; but a sudden glance at the prostrate form of Granger, and a recollection of his words, made her pause and bring to mind all that had transpired. That the vessel had been captured by pirates, she could no longer doubt-for she could hear the freebooters ransacking the brig from top to bottom, cursing their ill-lack for having allen in with such poor game; and that they had been led on by her father was too apparent. She saw that the story of Granger, which a little while before she had indignantly refused to believe, was indeed true; and he was now stretched a lifeless corpse; and the weapon that had caused his death was still sacking in the band of Gray. The evidence was too plain to admit of doubt. Her father was in reality a branded outlaw-a pirate-one for whom armed vessels were searching at that moment. Poor girl, what could she do? What could she say? Her pure mind recoiled with horror from the man to whom she co. sidere I herself bound by nature and dearest ties; how could she ever again respect him as a parent? Sie embl love him with a daughters affect n. Triv tor him with a Christian's faith and this 're te't was all she could do She turned away, covered her face with her ban is, and burst into tears.

As for Gray, he was silent; his daughter, whom he had hoped would always remain in ignorance of the life he was leading, now saw him in his true character—conscience, that for years had ceased to upbraid him, was now roused to action, and painted, in glowing colors, his many deeds of wickedness; pointed back to the time when he could look into his own heart and not shudder; when he could enter the house of God and not feel that the sacred edifice was desccrated by his unhoty presence; when he could rest at night without having his dreams disturbed by visions of the jet but terrible retribution that awaited him beyond the grave. In a moment remorse had taken possession of his hardened soul; and he had turned away to escape the sil mt, tearful look of agony that rested on the features of the gentle being before him. He felt unworthy to stand in her presence, blood-stained and guilty as he was. With a rapid strile La crossed the cabin, and rushed up the companion-way. As ha gained the deck, the report of a heavy g in boomed over the water. He looked around and saw the Windsor, that had just rounded the eastern point of the island, standing down towards them, with her canvas haule lup, and in every respect prepared for action, less than half a mile distant.

His own crew, having seen the Windser some minutes before, had cast off the grapplings that secured the Volture to the Sea Bird, and the latter was drifting slowly away, while the former was being rapidly get ready for the coming contest.

As Gray was nowhere to be seen when the two vessels separated, the crew naturally enough concluded that he had fallen in the late skirmish; so the first lieutenant took his place, and had scarcely time to get the n en to their respective posts, when the man-of-war ran down and opened her broatside upon them in good carnest.

It was refurned with equal spirit by the Vulture batteries, but with less effect, as her guns were much lighter; and, besides the men missed the able form of their chief, who was wont to encourage them by his presence in the hour of battle.

The combat between the Vulture and the Windsor was short, but it was terrible. One after another of the spars of the former tottered over the side; her hull being perforated by shot like a basket; and one by one of her crew had fallen, until there was scarcely enough left to make a show of resistance.

But they would not yield knowing that death was all they could expect at the hands of their enemies. At last a tremendens broadside swept the deck of the few that remained, and the batteries ceased to work.

Seeing this, Captain Clinton ordered the cutter to be hoisted out, and proceed, under the command of Lieutenant Mulgrave, to board the pirates.

The boat had scarcely left the side of the Windsor when a stream of fire rashed from the hatches of the ill fated pirate, followed by an explosion that filled the air with tragments of timber, that fell in every direction; and the Black Vulture and her lifeless crew, that had so long been the scourge of the ocean, was no more.

The last act of some poor wretch had been to fire the magazine, choosing to die with their vessel in preference to finishing their tives on the gibbet

Lieutenant Mulgrave pulled round the place for some time in hopes of picking up come of the unfortunate buccancers, but to no purpose; so he turned his attention to the Sea Bird, that lay at a little distance, too much injured by her late engagement to proceed on her voyage, until she had, at least, rigged a jury mast.

Ralph Gray, who was still on board, had, of course, interpreted all that had happened; but such a change had come over his feelings, that, from the first moment of the battle, he had not cared a straw what became of himself or his vessel.

He now sat on the bulwark, gazing at the approaching boat without appearing to think that they could harm him in the least. He was at length aroused from his reverie by the sound of Mulmave's voice hailing the brig; but even then he did to ceem to comprehend what was going on coordinate return a rational answer.

"Brig, alloy! shouted Mulgrave for the third or fourth time. "What's the matter, man? Have you lest your tongue?" Gray looked at the speaker stupidly for some minutes, and then answered in the usual manner.

- "Ahoy! What brig is that, pray?"
- " I do not know."
- " Well, who is the commander-do you know that?"
- " No one."

"The man must be a fool, or else he's crazy." sai! Mus-grave to one of the men, "but pull away, boys, and we will go aboard and see what is to pay with him."

In a few minutes the boat had reached the disable? crift, and the men climbed to the deck. Gray was still seate? en the bulwark but did not appear to notice them, or be aware of their presence, in fact, till Mulgrave approache? Lim and lai? his hand on his shoulder. He then turne? quickly around, and no sooner did the lieutenant see his face that he started back, as though he had seen a spirit from the other world, exclaiming:

"Ralph Mulgrave is that you?"

The sound of the name seemed to rouse Gray to consciousness. He started up, looked at the other a moment, and then answered:

- "Yes, I am Ralph Mulgrave; but it is a long time since I was addressed by that name, and still longer since I was worthy of it."
- "But do you know me?" continued Mulgrave, stepping forward and fixing a scarching glance on the other's face.
- "I should have known you among a thousand; you are my brother Reginald's son, and very classly resemble him, too,"
- "Well, sir, there is another question that I wish to ask you, and that is"-
- Gray, for so we shall continue to call han, laterapting the other.

Mulgrive noilded assent, and Gray continued:

"Your sister, sir, is on hourd this vessel, alive and naharmed; and she is one that you or any other man will be proud to call sister." "Thenk G !!" exclaime! Mulgrave, fervently, "that by sister, my long-lost sister Ethel, still lives; but let me see her, for I can har ily realize it is true."

"C'me with me, then; but let us go alone; we want

Do company."

"Balt so," said Mulrrave, as he motioned the men to r note on do h; and then, with a trembling step, followed Robin Gray to the cabin, where the latter left Ethel a short time before.

Det Ett. I was not there; and the only thing that met the rear was the ghastly corpse of Stephen Granger, ly-ing where he had fallen.

Gray similared as he passed it, but went along and a id nothing.

He walk lacross the cabin, opened a state-room door, at like was the object of their search, seated before a tall, her free buried in her hunds, and weeping as though ber heart would break.

"I bel," sail Gray, in a drep, mourn'ul voice.

Elelraieller leel and looked at him, but dil not speak.

Major ve could restrain his follogs no longer. He sin a fewerd and elspelher in hurarms, exclaiming:

"It is, in lead, my sister! Thank God, she is found at last!"

Ettel was bewillered. She released herself from Ler it. . er's arms, and looked at lim in astonishment, and to recer! Gray, who again a lir seel her:

Product he, "this is in rolly your brother; but your to to the suppose, the child of a base, wieled a two tat the dangleer of an honor able man; one was a call we make row rock. How you can to be in the product of the wall explain. I have a constant will explain the constant of your hard been my own child; each to the constant of your land, had a constant of your kelles, by my own hand, had ago.

"May you be happy in your new home, and forget that such as I ever lived."

Mulgrave listened to this speech without commell niing it in the least; but his noble heart was to the by the mournful voice and melancholy moan of Gray, as he turned to leave him.

"Stop, Uncle," he said, stepping forward, "this is no time to remember old injuries; and I freely forgive and forget any and all you may have done my family. We are all apt to do things at times that we are sorry for afterwards.

"But you know the good book tells us to forcive, if we wish to be forgiven; and I, for one, am always reary to do it—so, there's my hand."

"Mr. Mulgrave," sail Gray, slowly, and without taking the extended hand, "there is no use in decliving you. It you would soon find out the truth, if I did not tell it. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the general forgiveness you have extended to me; and I would give worlds, did I possess them, if, by so doing, I could mecept it.

"But you know not to whom you offer parlon. I am not, as you suppose, the captain of this craft, but I was the commander of the Black Vulture that disappared out youder a little time ago. Yes, sir, Raph Grav, the partie, and Ralph Mulgrave, your father's brother, is one and the same person. But your sister, sir, has always lively a ignorance of the life I was leading, till, sail to say, so happened to be on board, this vessel, when she came to know it.

"One thing more. I know that my life is fracticely and that it is your duy, after hearing what you have, to convey me in irons to your vessel, and the grown would be the finde. But I cannot—will not die that. I will nake my grave in the open—farewell!"

And, before the others well understood his meaning, Grey had dashed from the cabin, and was on deck. It was now dark, and, for a moment, he stood watching the waves as they chased each other by, in a state of mind bordering on desperation.

He hesitated for an instant, but looked up and muttered to himself, "there is but one way—one alternative," and then walked aft, with a hurried stride. A moment atter, a heavy plunge told Mulgrave, who had followed him, that his uncle had finished his wretched existence by suicide.

A boat was quickly manned, and put off in search of him; but, after some hours' fraitless labor, they returned and reported the probable fact, that the buccameer chief all pt with his followers, beneath the blue waves of the cean.

CHAPTER IX.

with a sad heart Lieutenant Mulgrave returned to the cabin, and acquainted his sister with what had happened, and at once proposed that they should remove from the brig to the Windsor, until the former could be in a mousure repaired, and be got in readiness to continue her voyage.

Ethel was quite ready to comply with the proposition; for, so long as she remained on board the brig, the remembrance of the awful end of the man who had desired her, as well as the self-destruction of him to whom sheld been wont to render the obelience and respect die a father, was brought with two-fold force to her mind. Consequently, it was with a feeling of relief that she stepped into the boat, and bade asien to the vessel in which she had witnessed scenes that few born in her position are ever called to be spectators of.

Captain Clinton had received intimation of what had transpired on hear the Sea Bird, and stood ready to well-come the sister of his first officer. With that polite attention, so characteristic of the man, he had or level a state-room to be vacated for her accommodation, and every effort in his power to render her situation as pleasure as possible.

After seeing his sister safe to her apartment, Line tenant Muigrave went on deck to attend to his values duties. He was almost incaediately joined by Line t Howard, who drew him a little apart from the or m, and said, in a voice that betrayed not a little exertement:

"Is it possible that the lady who came on board with you is your sister?"

"Yes; but wiry do you ask?"

St. Augustine."

"Is that a met? Are you quite sure you are not mis-her in so short a time?"

"No, I do not think you would; but it is stringe that you should happen to full in with her as you did; and so you still that I should have happened to come across her just now."

from b ginning to end. Little I thought when I vis poldling as a re with her, that I had your sister in k apage; rath little I thought, when I went to reconnotine the island down you'er, that your uncle was the chap we were in so red of. But there is one thing that I can't wall rstar', and that is, how the hady came to be on board that craft.

"The story is somewhat long; but come to my stater. ..., in about an hour and I will ted it to you; and then I must present you to my sister, who will be nost in you, no doubt, to recognize in the person who saved her life, her brother's best friend."

.

Early next merning, the Windsor dropped down mear to S a Bird, and sent a detachment of her crew on board to assist the disabled craft in getting up and righing a jary-mast.

I many of the crew of the latter half allen during the many with the Valture, still more reasonable at a contained that a latter half a latter half to be yet living, though builty wo mitel; but so, it to be juming of the buttle, half cone of the many of the pares of the vessel, and half estimate harme!

I am with the best medical aid in their power, so that by the time the man-of-war's men came on boar I, the brig presented a far different appearance to what it did the night before.

The wounded were all placed in their respective bert's; and, considering their circumstances, were quite comfortable.

Captain Brewster, Stephen Granger, and five of the crew were really dead; and, agreeably to castom, their todies were placed in a hammock cloth, with a weight attached, and at noon they were all committed to the deep.

It was a melancholy sight, to see seven man, in the prime of manhool, go to their list long home at the same time; and it impressed all who witnessed it with the truth of the saying, that when we least expect him, death is near, even at the door.

As there was not enough of the crew of the Sea Birl left to manage her, Captain Clinton sent some of his oval men on board, under the command of Lieutenant Malgrave, who was directed to carry the craft to Havana, and remain there until the Windsor followed him.

This, Mulgrave was quite willing to do, for two rec-

First, he well knew that a residence on board a man-of-war could not be pleasant to Enacl; and second, is it ofth, which was not fully recovered when he is it if war, was now rapidly declining in consequence of as I to rash exposure. So he decided it advisable to place himself again under the care of the physician who has attended him before.

The poor health of his officer was in fact the reason that had induced Captain Clinton to send him back as a the vessel, though he disliked very much to have to send him away.

He saw that he would be much more likely to recover, if entirely removed from his duties on saip-boura; sales kind-sear el communiter checitally dispensed with his services for the time being.

When all was really, the Sea Bird immediately got under way, while the Windsor remained to watch for the Valure's Tender that, according to Rollins' story, would be in the vicinity of St. Augustine, or the Bahama Islands before long.

We must now leave the latter in her present situathe n. and accompany the Sea Bird on her voyage to Havana.

Lieutenant Mulgrave took the first favorable opportunity that presented itself to explain to his sister the nystery commected with the early part of her lift, that may as well be inserted here, or, at least, a brief sketch of it.

CHAPTER X.

Ralph Gray, (alias Mulgrave,) and his brother R gindle, who was some fifteen years his smor, were the only colleden of a wealthy merchant, residing in Loudon. From the cradle, there had been a vist difference in the character of the two. Rulph, at an early age, evince be strong disposition for the society of the gambler and the debauchee.

It was in vain that his father pointed out the results of such a course; and even threatened to disinherit him. He went on his own way, and at the death of his father. (an event that was unlouded by hastened by the knowledge of his son's dissolute life,) found himself in the possession of a handsome property, in ready money, and with no one to restrain him in the least.

He at once plunged into all kinds of dissipation, and in ten years his entire fortune had disappeared at the card table; and debts of honor, as he called them, were standing against him to the amount of some two thou and donlars. What was now to be done? If these debts were removed, he might have a turn of fortune, and win back all he had lost.

He went to his Ir ther and acquainted him with his situation, and asked his assistance, promising to abstitution, and asked his assistance, promising to abstitution future from gambling in every form. Regionally who was the exact opposite of his brother, rejoiced that Rely's was at last forced to break with his low associates. He at once paid the demands against him, thinking he would fulfil his promise. But he was disappointed. No so a redid Raph find hims If free from debt, than he returned to his old habits, and worse in fact—for he now fult that it would be useless to apply to his brother after deceiving Lim as he hal-but money he must have at some rate; so, after thinking over various expedients, he at last hit en one that he finciel would answer his purpose. He fired his brother's name to an order for the amount he wished, and presented it at the bank, where the latter had considerable funds on deposit. The forgery was skilfully exacted, and was accepted without question, but no s or i. . I Ruph left the bunk, when the teller, who had pill him the money, impoened to take up the orders : r.in, and was struck with the somewhat labored appearmer of the signature. This rossel his suspicion; so he i..... I dely epend his desk, and took out an order that 1. I ban written by Raginal I Mulgrave in his presence, and compared them. The result was, that he was satisin his own mind that the paper was forgod; but, to remove all dub's, he put on his hat, and was soon at the der of Mr. Mulerave's house; and, at his request, was s. oan i...o the gentlem m's privite apartment.

"Is that order all right, sir?" said the teller, handing him the paper.

"No, sir, it is a forgery," said Reginald, promptly.
"Who presented it?"

" Your brother:"

are mistaken." . What, Ralph! No, it can't be; you

" N t in the least, sir; I know your brother well; it is no har suce he presented it is person."

"My G !! has it come to this? But, stry, I will ac-!: while it; I can't see my brother disgrace, while it is in my power to present it."

Yet first, sir, that this is a criminal affir, and that his a yet ty to see that the effector is effectably prover life a his firther mis hief. It is probable that yet a did not be the only one that would suffer, if this man was left at large."

I will be saidly for him, sir. I will promise that will be willing to take warning by it."

It is no use, Mr. Mulgrave. I would be glad to do as you wish, but those who break the laws must learn that there is a penalty affixed to them. If all offenders were spared on their friends' account, what would be the state of things in a little time? I am sorry for you, sir, but I know my duty and must do it. Good morning."

"Stop! stop! I wish to speak a worl with you," exclained Reginald, as the man turned to leave the room.

But he, not wishing to continue the conference, hurried out of the house, and walked rapilly to the bunk.

A few hours after, Ralph Malgrave was lo lged in prison awaiting his trial.

The officers of justice found him at the card table, where he had already staked and lost the greater part of the money obtained by the forged or ler.

It would be useless to detail the particulars of the trial. Suffice it to say, that he was tried, found guilty, and condemned to die.

R ginall made every effort in his power to save him; but no pardon could be obtained.

The known reckless character that Rulph had sustained for many years went against him, and now the respectability of his connection counted nothing. His fate was fixed, and his brother gave up in despair.

But his career was not to close here. By some means that was never known, he managed to make his escape from prison; that from England; and from that time nothing was heard of him, or any clue of his whereabouts obtained, until he was seen and recognized by his nophew, on how I the brig Sea Bird.

All that is known of his adventures, after he escaped prion, until he purchased the place called by him God's that, was been a from a letter written by himself, and a lire sel to Ebbel, in which he gave a brief account of his win lerings, but did not mention the means he had copyed in escaping from prison.

It appeared from his statement that he believed, when first arrested, that if his brother had acknowledged the formal paper, he would have been safe; and, notwithseen ing the effort that he made to save him, he never could relinquish the idea.

So, ther he escaped from confidement, he larked about in L. n'on a day or two, thinking of some way whereby locall revenge hims if on his brother-in-law for bring-ing him, as he supposed, into his present situation.

One evening, while he was walking in the vicinity of his brother's house, he saw Ethel, then a child of two y as eld, lying in a cralle before one of the long windows that happened to be standing open. In a moment, the last crossed his mind to obtain possession of the child, and fly with it from Lighard. The next instant he had clubed over the fence, and stood within the apartment. He quickly collected what few articles of the child's various that were in sight, took the sheeping infant in his aims, and was about retreating in the same way that he cane, when he recollected that he was destitute of hery; so he quickly entered the next room, which he have was his brother's apartment, and from the de k took about two hundred dollars.

With this he are le his escape, unseen, from the house, and gained the street.

At the shop of a Jew, who lived near by—one who is ver recognized a person, by the way, when it would be uniforment for them to be recognized—he made a full characteristic dress, and then proceeded on board a vessel that was lying in the river, bound to the West Indies, and control persons, giving his name as Raph Gray. B fore noting the vessel sailed, and the forger was safe—at least for the present.

Will not be arrived at the West Indies it was necessary to look about for something to do; but he had no know-look business matters, and was entirely unacquainted with a year ful calling; consequently, it was not struct the the should are in seek such companions as he had been wont to associate with.

A banded hindred spirits was soon forml; and, fir a year or mare he lived as he could. In the meantime, his compinions formed the plan of fitting out a piratical vessel, and the command was off-red to him. He accepted it: and he at once set forth to find some place where he could leave the stolen child in safety.

It was a singular thing for a criminal, flying for his life, to burthen himself with a helphas child; but it was not the only strange thing that he did. His whole life, in fact, seemed made up of the most eccentric actions. In the first place, it was strange that one born in the position that he was, surrounded with all the advantages of wealth, society and elucation, could find pleasure in the companionship of the most despicable of all the human i mily (we mean the wretched beings found in the fashionship drinking saloons and gambling houses,) but such was the case, and in all probability his after career was all oxing to this propensity.

But, to do him the justice, he wished Ethel to grow up as remote as possible from the evir influence attendant on the life he chose to follow, and for that reason he purchased Glen's College, and engaged the worthy, God fearing Morton for his steward.

When the child began to take an interest in reading, be furnished her with books—the tendency of which wou'd be co-refine and elevate her mind; and, in short, gave her every opportunity for improvement that the place afforded; catefully guarding against any accident which would lead her even to suspect that he was engaged in anything but a lawful calling.

CHAPTER XL

When the Son Bird arrived at Havana, Reginal I Mulgrave lost no time in obtaining suitable quarters for his sister, where she could remain until an opportunity offered for returning to England; and E hel, unwilling to leave her frien's at Glen's Cottage in ignorance of her fate, wrote to S Ls Morton, and gave him a brief account of what had happened since she left him.

Two nentles passed away, and nothing was heard from her old friend, and she began to think that her letter had never reached him.

One evening, as she was sitting abone in her parlor, a servant entered and informed her that there was an old man at the door who wished to speak with her.

"An old man," said H hel, standing up. "It must be Slis Merten. Admit him, Ann, and then retire until you are called for."

The girl departed, and in a few moments Ethel hearla well known step. The door opened, and the good old man stood before her.

"Get these you!" he said, as he advanced to meet let. "I began to think that I never should find you it is. I have searched this town from one end to the force, or er, or I was just on the point of givin' up when I got a tell in the point of givin' up when I got a tell in the window."

him.

"No. Mist, I rever got any letter from you; but I got by her Cortan Gray that explained all that had happened."

"A letter fr to Captain Gray? Why, Silvs, you have been deceived, for he is no longer in the land of the liv-

"No, Miss Ethel, I am not deceived; for I saw him less than an hour ago; but his v'yge is about over, poor man; I had no idee, when I first seed him, that he would last as long as he has."

"What story is this that you are telling, Silas? Do you mean to say that he is really alive yet?" "Yes, Capten Gray is really alive; but he won't be long, as I said before; howsomever, I may as well explain, so that you may understand it. You see, most two months ago I got a letter from him, teliin' me all about his wicked life, and what a rough v'yge you hal male; and he asked me to come to him, for he was alone and very sick. I obliged him, Miss Ethel, for I thought it hard for a por critter to die alone, particularly one with such a conscience as he had to keep him company. Well, I found him without much difficulty, and he told me how lie had managed to make his escape. You know when he jumped overboard he was kind o' distracted like, and meant to drown himself; but he happened to get entangled in some rizgin', and t en he had a chance to think a bit; and he made up his mind that he had sins enough to repent of already without committin' one that he never could repent of; so, while they are hurryin' about and pullin' off after him in the boat, he swam to the vessel, and managed to crawl on board; but he was a'raid to show himself, so he hid somewhere among the rubbish; and, in reality, came here in the same craft that you dil. When they arrived at this port he succeeded in gettin' ashore, without bein' seen, and make his way to the house of one of his old friends; but they heard of his miship very soon, and as he wasn't rich then, they left him to take care of himself."

"Stop, Silas I" exclusion I Ethel, starting to her feet, "I must visit him immediately. Do not wait a moment, or it may be too late. I would that I had known it before, and I would have taken care of him gladly, with all his f."; he has been kind and good to me. Poor man, have be must feel to be dying and alone; but, thank God, he did not die by his own hand."

"Truly, we sho lit ank God for that," said the old some solutionly; "but let us go now, I have a craft here, and we will go right abourd, if you will."

"I will be with you in a moment. Annette." (The girl to per i in answer to the summons.) "Tell my brother, when he comes in, that I have gone out, and shall not be let it quite late; but he need not be anxious, for Mr. Morton will be with me."

The girl bowed and withdrew, won lering where her mistress could be going at that time of night with an old sailor; but she kept her thoughts to herself, and took a station at the win low where he could observe the direction taken by their carriage.

A start rice brought Ethel and Morton to a small, comfort solooking mansion, in an obscure part of the city, where they stopped, and in a few moments they were the ling beside the death-bed of Rulph Gray. There was no one in the room except a negro woman, who was striven to alleviate the sufferings of the dying man in the lest manner she could; but everything gave evidence that the habitation was the abode of poverty and crime. Gray raised his eyes as they entered, and a faint saile lighted up his pide features as he recognized E hel, who with a trendling step and an almost bursting heart, bent by rulm with the affectionate solicitude of a daughter.

What a charge a few short weeks had made in that franchishmest gizantic mould. The once strong arm now lay powerless by his side.

The once flashing eyes were now sunken, and rolled willly in their rockets. The dark books that shaled his book is forehead were damp with the dew of death. The stream of life was rapidly approaching the abyss, down which it will plunge, and be forever lost to the gaze of all mortals.

This is a kindness I do not deserve," said Gray, in a locally whisper. "I feel, Ethel, that I am already hunched on the ocean of eternity, and earth is fist disappearing below the horizon. Could the soul but be annial ited with the body I could face death—but that future. How can I meet a jist Gol, whose laws I have so long place lat d finne? I cannot, dare not; yet I must; no escape, no hope, but to pass eternity among devils and lost spirits."

"Oh! do not talk so, unless you would break my heart," said Ethel, in a voice half-chokel with tears; "but remember that He against whom you have sinned stands ready to blot out every sin, and never turns away from the dying sinner. With your last breath seek a reconciliation with your God, who is able and willing to save."

"Amen," said Morton, fervently.

Gray did not answer. His breath became slow and labored. He pressed the hand of Ethel. His lips moved for a moment. The clock tolled the hour of midnight; and, as the sound of the last stroke died away, he caused to breathe. We seek not to lift the yeil that hides the future.

CHAPTER XI.

I rashort time Ethel remained silent in the chamber of death, reflecting on the strange drama in which she had played so conspictions a part, and had just witnessed the charges are. If range is were at length broken by Morton, who said, as he brushed away a tear with his rough hand:

W. H. he's gone, poor man; and I ain't sorry I was been to take care of him. It's hard to his alone, Miss E hel; hat you nust go home now; I will make all the arrangements for his buryin'."

Will a E helicrive lat heme, she saw Ernest Hower I will her brother—(the former having come in the Whatserth. evening)—and both were awaiting her coming, with not a little saxisty, as neither of them knew what hel called her away.

Jally of their surprise, when they learned that she had just name at from the death-bed of Ralph Gray, who was support the trem to have perished, by his own act, two months before.

wished the let likes for his uncle to be performed as privality at all his so, on the following evaluate, accomted by his sittle and Howard, he repaired to a sectitive is where the lanctomb of the breament had been a likely as hand of Monton. With uncovered heads, the many is the like of an grave, while the old sailor, in a likely like is twelve, and the church sorvine for the limit of the ideal of the first and was casting its pale that we had it to map, while the gentle evening by each detailed the things y books of the aged man, who, with up-turned eyes, addressed a fervent prayer to the Suprema Being in whom he trusted.

The pray r was finished. The negroes, who had borne the corps to its find resting-place, filed up the hundle sepulchre, and with slow steps the few mourners turned away.

O ce more, and only once. E hel visited that grave - and that was on the day before she left Herman. Shis Morton, in the honest simplicity of his hear, had placed a rough stone over the tomb, on which was traced, in rule characters, these simple words:

IN MEMORY

OF

RALPH MULGRAVE.

While the Windsor remained in Havana, Ecrost Haward was a constant and welcome visitor at the residence of Ethel; and Mulgrave soon saw with pleasure that something more than a mutual friendship existed between them. He had found his sister possessed of all that delicate sometiment that makes woman lovable, combined with a fault-less person and well cultivated mind. And he knew his friend to be all that was noble and generous in mind; in short, he forced they were just suited for each other.

When alone with his sister, he was wont to dwe'l on the many gallant deets of his young companion; and the resy blush that manthal Ethel's sweet face told him that she was not an indifferent listener to the well-merited praise bestowed on the man to whom she had given her first girlish love.

Winter passed rapilly and pleasantly away, without an opportunity off ring for E hel to return to the hone from which she had so long been absent. When spring returned, It gired Malerave, whose health self contained to declar, as by I to bave the service, and start for England as soon as possible.

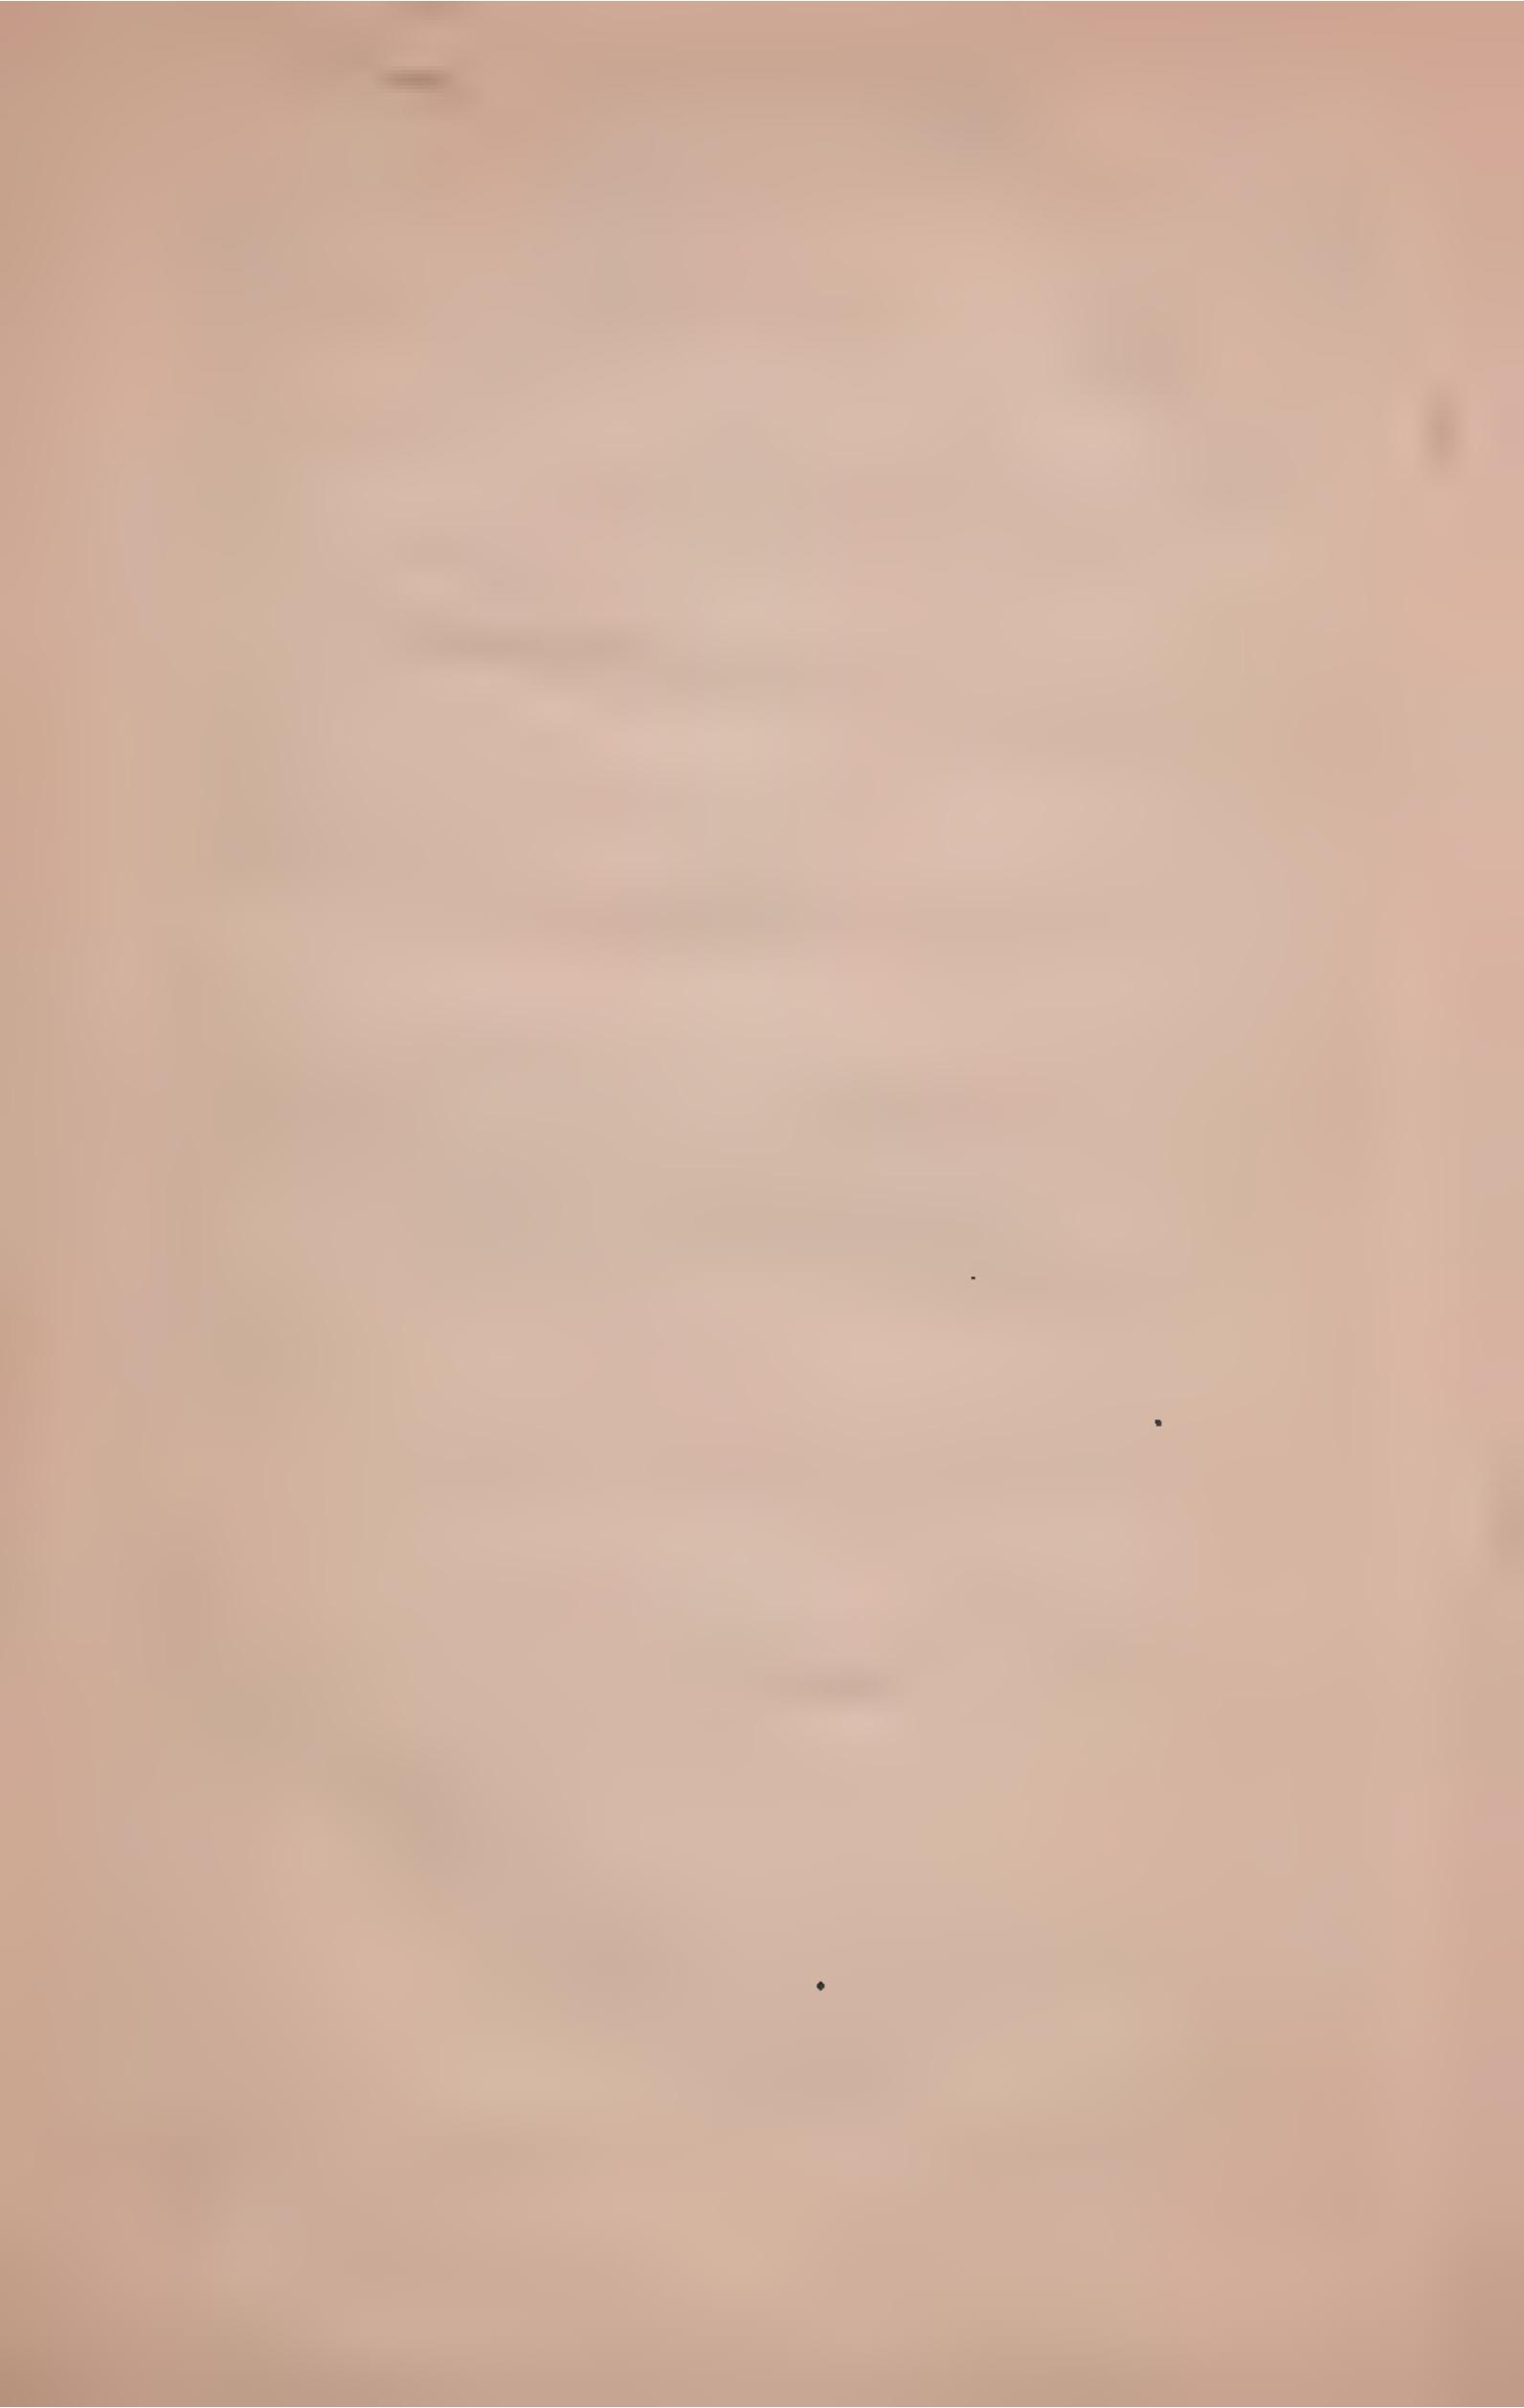

A presence was at last engaged in a vessel bound to Londen. And engage morning, our heroine accompanied by her trother and S his Morton, (for Malgrave had resolved never to lose sight of the worthy old sailor) started on the homeward voyage.

The journey proved a pleasant one, and in due time they arrived at their destination in safety, where the meeting between father and child can be better imagined than described.

There was but one circumstance that tended to allow all Mr. Mainrove's cup of happiness, and that was a knowning of the dreafful career of his brother. Though he hall not suspected that he, if living, was leading all but in honor the life, yet he had never dreamed that he had gone so far.

She Marion was never permitted to have the house of the Malgraves. The few remaining years of his life wars particle search plenty; and when death called for it, he was ready to depart. It was E believe was her that a costly manager marked his resting-place.

THE END.

BEADLE: DIME NOVELS.

A Dollar Book for a Dime!

The ser as the series of the s Ent to the terms of the second to the term of the second of t paper covers of bright salmon color-at the nominal sum of TEX CENTS. Wa. I-Malecka: '-! - '-No. 2 The Plane Callifor, D. W. ----author of " Myra," " Sybil wasse," " Esther." Azteca at the time of their conquest. The orc. The scene of this romance to laid in and characters emigrace Cortex and his lendors; 1 0 ----A TOTAL TO THE TOTAL TOT lugate. In beauty and interest, it is quite Gautemozin, and many others, It is a ro . . . processing and a second of Obs' WOTAL No. 10-The Backwoods Bridge I D. The 2 The Privateur's Crester, of the The state of the s 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF THE the state of the s i .t.c., right makes the Na . Craise" to is the story of time guer-No. 11 T' Pil onerof' o Viriation or, the bortunes of a tubat. He ross. by Mrs. the thread of a awest love story, giving it a M. A. DENISON, author of "Tun Pumbio's double saterest. Charge," etc. A nevel of Cuban and New R. S Mineral a C 1 (Alleria Tv I I I I TO THE WAR A STATE OF THE PARTY OF T Mile Ass & Stephens, author of "Mininesed criguality. LA," "Sybil Chase," "Esther," e'c. A re-No. 12 1. 1 H. Ron, Trappert of I'fe Myra Ciark Galaes, fall of pathoe and exquiin the North-West, By LOWARD & HELD port of the Trust time and the and the A life-like delinention of the life of hunters May 2 thing the state of the state of Panetter. By Mrs. M. V. Vieron, author of stone, and away on the Red Liver trail. The Real Property lies and the last of the and the second s 6.10 ... 10 / 2. er best es uncta se hamor esquen to tol two To. 13 Court Washington, W. I Wasts ----7 -. 5 Th. (. The Belt: /* ' . By COLIN HARMAN, Scene in the won for our foretations the immortality of after the discovery of this rounky, herees. It also embraces a story of love and when the cil Castilians first stepped upon devotion, which proves how notife and true these shores. The hero, a Spanish cavaller, were the wives and daughters of those beroes. trove an Indian maiten, and, after many ad-J.o. 11 The Blue ruld bectione; or, , a + W ... The state of the s A downright good love tale, full of the au-tions, worth a dozen of the Lightsh regimes A. DENBOY, Asthor of The Prisoner of La We have the state A remance of the winds of Pennsylvanus, and No. 15-The Frontier Angel: a ----- 1 ----THE RESERVE AND DESCRIPTION OF THE PERSON NAMED IN A said of Epot sound of A toon & a fund Character. etc. The locale is in Northern Kentucky and La. T The Mean rest in: introduced embrace several well known hisof the Pire-Pitt. By HARRY CAVESDESS, M.S. Love of " I as Privateer's Craise," etc. An extorical characters. It is worthy of theasther's · Cities sea commune of the " times which tried fine repute. areals and are Part James and his terrible No. 18 Creic Fred 1. -- 12, 1:, 1:, 1:, DARKER CONTINUES AND AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF on two Continents, by Mrs. Marra V. 1 and give a dila examples of his devotion to the same of the sa 15 brintier, by Birmann S. Fillis, nath rief "Lat Bid v." " Nat Lodd," "Thoromon," etc. toe story proper, this is one of the A respect to as rather of his latenestive to Silnamens' Papers," Proved hervelf one of t'e nestant New York, we en the lasten carried terms tate tates t come income to the same of the same and has prought for powers so a humosist of

well as novelist, it plays

- No. 17 Madge Wylde, the Yorg Made had 1; a. L. a. Sand world the fill as and low life, which are tain phases of high and low life, which are great beauty, pathos and excitement.
- No. 18-Nat Todd; or, the Fate of the Stoux Captive. A sequel to "Bill Biddon," (No. 14.) By E. S. Ettis, author of "Seth sones," etc. The odd "Nat" here plays a long with him over the plains, into the fast-nesses of the far North-west, whither he pursues a shadow. It is a very odd and entiting atory.
- No. 19-Massasoit's Daughter; or, the French Captaves. By A. J. H. DUGANNE, author of "The Peon Prince," etc. Sameeda, daughter of Massasoit, was an Indian Princess of rare beauty and virtues. Her his was full of romance, and her relations to the whites have rendered her name memorable. This story is of marked power and dramatic interest.
- No. 26-Florida; or, the Iron Will. By Mrs. M. A. Davison, author of "Tim Bumble's Charge," "Prisoner of La Vintresse," etc. This is one of its author's best. The action and characters are of to-day—acting out the drama of his as it is, in certain social circles of our cities.
- No. 21 Sybil Chase; or, the Valley limite, Ly Mrs Ann & Streuens, author of "Eather," "Malaeska," "Myra," etc. In this story it may be said that Mrs. Stephens has excelled herself. It is a romantic mingling of the wild California life, and the elegant society and association of New-York City.
- No. 23-Winifred Winthrop; or, the Lady of Atherton Italia By Chara Audi 314. "The Lady of Atherton Hail?" delibertes fashionable life as it exists the South. It is acknowledged to be one of the very fast remaines of this polented sotheress—is Trize Story—and can not fair to please.
- No. 24-The Trail Manteres of Monowano, the Snawnee spy. by Loweth S. Ettis, author of "The Forest Spy," etc. A story of the "Dark and Bloody Ground" (Kening Mr. Ellis' works have had epoticos circulation, both in this country and in England.
- * c. 25 The Peon Princes of the Yankee haight breath By A. J. H. Dy Panne, author of the "King's Man," etc. 1' introduces us to him the years ago, and gaves us pictures of the country and its remarkably varied life, which challenge attention from their novelty and exciting nature.
 - o. 26-Janbel De Cordova; or, the Brethren of the Coast. By John S. Warner, buthor of "The Wreck of the Albion," etc.

- follows them to the Island of Tortuga, where their stronghold was, and depicts their life there and on the seas in pursuit of their prey.
- No. 27-Stella, the Daughter of Liberty. A Tale of the War of "C. By N. C. IROX, and there of "The Double Hero," "The Two Guards," etc. The heroine here is a true daughter of liberty, who dares every thing for her love of country and affection for its defenders. It is historically true, yet is one of the most interesting of romances.
- No. 28-King Barnaby; or, the Maidens of the Forest. A romance of the Mickmacks. By N. WM. Bustreed. This novel deals with Indian life, and the exciting incidents of their conflicts with the whites, introducing a great variety of characters, both male and female. While the story is historically true, it is, in all the elements of the romance, exceedingly enticing and satisfactory.
- No. 29—The Forest Spy. A Tale of the war of 1812. by Laward S. Ellis, author of "bill Biddon," Nat Todd," "Conomo," etc. No romance, since the days of Cooper's colobrated "Spy," has issued from the pressure-rior to this eachanting story. It introduces as to a remarkable character, as well as to Harrison, Tecumseh and Proctor; and while history is verlied, it is subordinate to a romance of singular power and interest.
- You someter's Adventure in Mexico. By A. J. H. Droanne, author of "Massassit's Dutghter," etc. A story of adventures in Mexico, on the breaking out of the last war. The here and hereins are real live characters, and their remarkable adventures in escaping from the Greasers will not fall to interest and who love humor, novelty, hereism and American spirit,
- No. 31—The Double Hero: a Tale of Sea and Land. By N. C. Iron, author of "The Maid of Esopus," "Gideon Godbold," "Stella," etc. In this delightful novel we have the entire story of the battle of Lake Eric, the battle of the Thames, the expedition upon Sackett's Harbor, etc., while the by-characters, and the life on Hewson's Grant, give to the work the two-fold zest of wooing and warring
- No. 82-Irona; or, Life on the South-west Border. By Lowand S. Ettis, author of "The Hunter's Cabin," The Frontier Angel," etc. Mr. Ellie has here entered a new though congenial field of character and adventura. Woman enters more into the thread of the start in the book such a delineation of life and adventure on the old South-west border (of Texas) as will render "Irona" one of the most exciting and pleasing of all Mr. Ellis works.
- No. 63-Maura Guinen: A Plantation it mance. Double Number, 225 pages, beautifully illustrated. Price 30 cents. By Mrs. M. V. Victor, author of "Uncle Ezekiel," tion life during the holidays is selzed upon by night-dancing, every-teiling and love-making of the slaves, a romance embodying and the tragedy and pathon, the sucrew and enjoyed and its two-fold experiences. Since Mrs. States of the compared to the sucrew and enjoyed.

- No. 81-Ruth Margerie: A Romance of the Revolt of 1809. by Mac M. A. Dantson, author of "Florida," "Pressurer of La Vintresse," etc. In this story the author has introduced us to one of the most exciting episodes in the history of the Massachusetts Bay colony. It is one of this popular author's best historical fictions.
- No. 25-Erst and West; or, the Beanty of White Mild. By Mrs. Frances Filters Barry, a dury of "The Land Cinin," etc. Western life is here reproduced in a story of peculiar interest and heraty. It introduces to scenes such as only "the Settlements" can produce, and characters such as no other section of the world convains but "the West."
- No. 86-The Biflersen of the Miami.
 A Tale of Some era O. in. By Enward S. Entra author of "The Trail Hunters," "Irona," etc. The "Ridemen" were true sons of the forest, with hearts of fire and nerves of steel, who became the settlers' hope and Indians' terror. The author has seized upon a storing episode of their memorable career to give us a book as attractive as any thing from his pen.
- No. 37-Godbold, the Spyt or, the Faithful and Unit think of list. By N. C. Inov, author of "The Double Hero," "The Two Gaards," etc. A powerful and beautiful tale of fide. its and treason in the Revolutionary War. While it tells the story of Arnold's remarkable marriage, of his life of secret plotting and final betraval of his country, It also gives the toughing history of Andra's love. Through all runs the title of the heroism of the scout and say, Gideon Godbold.
- No. 38-The Wrong Man: A Tage of the Living Seat ements. By higher J. Thousan arthor of The Allens, etc. We have, in this fine novel, elements of peculiar interest. The society of the early Settlements is deguerrotyped to the life, with all its remarkable characters and strings incidents. But this is all submitiary to the exciting drama which is the bushes of the story proper—a drama that, will it illustrates border life, elicits an interest remaind interest, such as only truly powerful creations can invite.
- Me. 29-The Land-Claim: A Story of the Univer Manuel, By Mrs. F. F. Barrier of meizes upon the novel life and experience of all of Kiners and Nebraska, and are now expecibing for away toward the Rocky Mountains. The story is one of compined novelty and beauty.
- No. 10 The Unionist's Daughter: A

* , .

And $1 - The Hamman's California Ton-

- coped with the savages, and finally overcame
- No. 42-The King's Rinns A Story of South Carolina in Revolutionary times. By A. J. H. Dusanns, author of the "Pena Prince," etc. The author seizes upon the moment when the city of Charleston was being defended by the brave Monitrie to instroduce us to that element of South Carolina's disloyalty which rendered many of her of least surfamous in the even of privious. The story as a story is unusually exciting.
- No. 43-The Allena; A Tale of the gre b kanawha Valley. By Hrvary J. There is no more remantic spot in the Union than in Kanawha Valley, Western Virginia, and in no section of the country is there so much of remance in its history. "The Allena" will be found to enchain the attention from its very first,
- No. 41—Agnes Falkland; A Story of Continental Times. By N. C. Igov, author of Godbold the Spy," The Double Hero," etc. The battle fields of Lexington and Bunker Hill, the fatal expedition against Quebec, the siege of Roston, are here portrayed with tivid truthfulness. Through all runs the thread of a good, old-fashioned love story. It is a choice historical runsance.
- No. 45-Eather: A story of the Oregon Trail. By Mrs. Ann S. Szarmans, author of "Maineska," "Sybil Chase," "Myra," etc. In "Eather" the authoress insentered a field somewhat new even to her prolitic yea. The incidents and characters partake of the wild stirring life of the far West. Mrs. Stephens has written much, but no story from her per is better calculated to arrest attention than "Esther."
- No. 46-Wreek of the Albien. By Jones S. Warner, author of "Breturen of the Coast." "The Black Ship," etc. A good sea tale is a rare production. We have one here, however. Mr. Warner is a sailor of experience, and writes of the sea with a sailor's love of the deer. The story has had a very large sale, as, indeed, have all of Mr. Warner's warner.
- No. 47-Tim Pumble's Charge; or Mrs. Latimon's One Great Sorrow. by Mrs. M. A. Davissov, author of "Ruth Margerie," etc. Into this romance the author has thrown all her vivacity and power. It is a tale of New England and New York life, full of spirit of country and city. It is possessed of all the author's best characteristics.
- No. 48-Conomoo, the Huron. By End.

 "Forest Spy," "Ridemen of the Miami,"

 "froma," etc. Notwithstanding the extraordinary merits of some of the works named, this story is, in some respects, and the Ridewho plays so prominent a part in the "Ridemen" and the "Hunter's Cabin."
- No. 49—The Gold Hunters. By Mes. M. V. Victor, nuttion of "Alice Winde," " Maum Guines," "Uncle Ezekiel," "Unionist's Daughter," etc. This work is one of intense " matic power and personal interes. It gives the power and personal interes. It gives the same of the state of the s

- No. 50-The Black Ship. By Jone S. Warner, nuthor of "Wreek of the Alojon," "Brethren of the Const," "Off and On," etc. I erhaps no sea story issued from the press during the last few years has had the "run" which has attended the tale of this very exciting and delightful romance of the deep. It is fall of vigor, truthful portraiture and novelty of incident, and will long continue a favorite.
- No. 51-The Two Guarda, By N. C. Lane, at ther of "Gudeon Goodeld," "Agnes I a. Liand," "The Double Hero," etc. Mr. Iron has been created and sustained an interest quite fresh and original. Its portraitures are extremingly unique. Chemr, a slave, and Leo, a bloomhound, are the leavenments of a drama of a theroughly novel but picasing nature.
- No. 52-Single Eyet A Story of King Philip's War. By Warker St. John, author of "The Scout," etc. This work, upon its first appearance, was heralded as a New Scharton. It is no of the most powerful writers of Indian and frontier life since the days of kenimore Cooper.
- No. 53-Haten and Loven; or, the Lessen of four Lives, by the author of "Madge Wylde." This beart remance is full of power, for and pathes. It introduces life as it is truth, preserves the purity of thought and feeling requisite for all works introduced to this series. It is a captivating remance.
- No. 54-Myrtle, the Child of the Prairie.

 by Mrs. M. V. Victor, author of "The Emer ald Necklace," "Missin Guines," etc. Our povel than this. It is the story of a female child found on the prairie by a backetor, and Romantic episodes of life, love, humor and place contrive to render it a very novel

- No. 53-Off and On; or, the Renger's First Cruise. By John S. Wanner, author of "The Black Ship," "Brethren of the Const," etc. "Off and On " gives us sea lies in 1777, when our Continental Congress was too peop to float a navy; but when the trave man of our tration cut the sea with privateers. The author has seized upon a great historic character, whose wonderful decis are recorded in the romance with the truth of history.
- No. 56-Ahmo's Plots or, the Governor's Indian Child. By Max Ass S. Stephess, author of "kather," "Sybil Chase," "Myra," etc. This production is devoted to the time of Frontenac, French Governor of Canada, on the first production of a strange nature.

 The work, in many respects, will be regarded as one of the most admirable ever written by Mrs. Stephens.
- No. 67—The Ecout. By Warney St.

 Westward of the state of

- No. 5% The Mad Hunter; or the door till of the Le Foresta. By Mrs. M. A. Deny son, author of "Tim Bumbie's Charge," "Florida," etc. Here we have a picture of blensed light and shade. The number of dramatic personar, and the rapid succession of peculiar events, combine to produce a very singular novel.
- No. 59-Kent, the Ranger; or, the Fasuther of "Onnomoo," "The Hunter's Cab, etc. Here the author gives us three or tour sujerb characters, whom he leads through the ferest, on the trail, in the Indian camp, in the hand to-hand struggle, on the race for life, to the forest home—presenting a succession of events which command the reader's undivided attention.
- No. 60-Jo Daviess Client; or, "Court mg" in Kentucky. By Mrs. M. V. Victor, author of "Myrtie," "The Gold Hanters," etc. In this fine story we have reproduced, to the such characters and incidents as only Kentucky can produce. Jo Daviess was one of the most remarkable men of that remarkable period. He plays in the rovel such a part as only Jo Daviess could play in and out of court.
- No. 61-Laughing Eyen; a Tale of the Natchez bort. By light J. Thomas, author of "The Allens," and "The Wrong Man." The Natchez were, inquestionably, the noblest tribe of savages on the North American continent. In this romance we have the Indian and the courtly brenchman trought out in full relief. The story is a perfect wilderness of storing incidents and impressive deducations of character.
- No. 62-The Unknown; a tale of 1777.

 by N. C. Iron, author of "The Two Guards," "Agnes Falkland," "Godbold the Spy," etc.
 The whole story of the March of the British upon Philadelphia (1777), the battle of Brandywlne, and the occupation by the enemy of the then National Capital, is here given. Social life of the time is buely painted by the ture of female character. It is a powerful dramatic production.

- No. 68-Mahaska; the Indian Princess.

 By Mrs. Ann S. Strenkns, author of "Abmo's Plot," "Father," "Sybit Chase," "Myra," etc. "Mahaska," though not a sequel of "Abmo's Plot," is a part of the drama there unfoided. It is a work of sustained power, and carries the reader along as if it held the mastery of heart and mind.
- No. (in The Wrecker's Prize: " the anthor of "Laughing Eyes," "The A engine etc. This enchanting novel will delight the limit of the anti-

- a the village, with ex-
- No. 67-In lian Jim. By Epwarp S. Ettie, anth rid" Lag Ringers of the Mohawk," "Keen, the Ranger," "Organiso, the Haron," etc. The anta-r has chosen for the the ne of tals story the Minnesota inscarcre of two?, whose harrows threlied the land with surprise and pity. The whole history of that bayage
 and pity. The whole history of that bayage
- No. 64 The Brigantine; or, Admiral Lowe's Law Crotee. Br Ducatur Patterive, U.S. N. Dut h New York, which has been innertailed to "Knickerhocker's" history, is repreduced to the life in this humorous, two, remarks and refreshing romance. It is both a land and seastory, calculated to give estimated in the ail.
- Es. CD-Black Hollow; or the Drag on's links. A take of the Kamapa in 1779. By N. C. I now, author of "The Unknows," etc. The existence of the brigands knows as the "Ramapa Brothers" is a bistoric fact, which a fir the burn of a Re. 73-The Indian Queen. By Mrs.

Gen. I am .

- No. 71 Time Loss Trails | I
- 1. CO The Man House House in the second
- For The Color of t

- "Cruiser" performed productes of valor and lated for from the land. As a story of sociated land, it combines many of the excellent cies of Marry att and Cooper.
- No. 75 Tay, Haster a Paragram, Print author of Lost Iran," etc. This work reproduces the character of the missionary whose story was narrated in the "Loss Traff," and was 'ired to see the outbreak of the North seestern Imaians in 1860. The author print tic and personal interest as to render it a most absorping and pleasing work.
- No. 76-The Scout's Prize; er, The Old Itatich Binnetebook, by linearing Johnston, it is adventure, and exertement of incident, all contribute to render this novel one of unfailing interest. It gives to the camp and heart-life of the berees of 76.
- No. 77.—Quindaro; or, the Heroine of Fort Larames. by the author of "The Silver Bugie," Here we have the old Fort and impromentic history revived in a story of singular beauty. The author writes of what is known, giving us such transcripts of life on the Plaine as make the puises beat the quicker.
- No. 78-The Rival Scoutager, the Fireget tierrism. A story of the Stege and ball of First Presq' Isla. By the author of "Onceings.' While the author adheres almely to historical firsts, the biter se interest of the romance is not restricted on that account.

 daugur, draing, endurance and personal description of the firest rangers are depicted with stortling power, while a beautiful red daughter of the firest crosses the stream of the story like a fair vision—adding beauty and pation to it.
- By the author of "Quindaro," Silver Bugge," etc. The terrible winter of "17, when the American army lay at Valley F not only for find but for clothing, the author has seized upon to weare the warp and woof of a very interesting and highly dramatic story.
- J. Hawterov. A firest pen-picture, full of power and exciting interest. A white may and an Oromania Indian are friends, who must vividity recall Josephia celebrated Path-finder, and his friend the Sampent.
- No. Si-The Two Hunters; or, the Canon Camp. A commune of the Santa Figural. By Mrs. M.V.Vieron, author of "Gold Hanters," etc. Life in the Wachita courtry, on the Red River of the South, Is between a ted in the adventures of a quartette, who, for variety and originality, will challen the admiration of every lover of what is mirrative, in characterisation and praceful in narrative.
- No. 82-The Mystic Caree. Prihe and the and the of "Rivel Scouts." A most entire and the middle of the last century. It intro:

 a middle of the last century. It intro:

 Scouts." who act lesting parie is a drama of more than ordinary interest.

- No. 83-The Golden Harpoon; or, Lost
 A Street Mind Willing Grand By Rooms Standard, R. A. Street
 "On the Deep," "Cast Away," etc. A street Line William Company of the Compa
- Captives of the Kissimes. A Tale of the Indian War in Florida. By the author of "Silver Bagle," "Quindaro," etc. Wherein is introduced the celebrated Billy Bowlegs, in his romantic character of a highly civinged savage. It is a story of singular mystery and novelty. Its pictures of the Evergiades are admirably drawn.
- No. 86-Red Plusne, the Renegade. A Tale of the Blackfeet Country. By J. Stantary Figuresov, author of "Willing Cantive" in the to nature—not "sensational," in a series of adventures in the country of the ferocious Blackfeet, white the graceful introduction of Indian and white "fair ones" adds to the romance the interest of the "grand".
- No. 87-On the Deep. A Story of the Pacine. By Roger Statutes, and red "Golden Harpoon," Cast Away, "etc. A sea the finance of the terms of the sea, to him has been the best the sea, to him has been talled the of love, in which a mission-
- No. 85-Captain Molly; or, the Heroines of Trenton. A Tale of the Revolution. By Mrs. Mark A. I was a star, of Warrage at the crossing the Delaware, and his victory at Trenton. It gives us a noble picture of the devotion and heroism of those days.
- No. 83-Star Lyes; or, the Rangers of the puebaman. A Tale of the Old French-leader. By W. J. HAMILTON, author of hages Eye," etc. A capital story, by a capital novelest. In his forest characters and incidents he is, unquestionably, one of the best writers now catering for the public. His
- Rosen Siaracck, author of "On the Deep," "Golden Harpoon," etc. It will be hard to and heart than this really defeatto a popular writer. We commend it to all in search of a good sea ro-

- No DI-The Last Carlie, AT THE !! I ture. By J. Stanley Henrenson, au-

- cidedly new—a tale of the Crow country, wherein lies "Pike's Peak," and its wonderful gold deposits. A Crow captive first found the gold, eached it, escaped, returned to the country, etc. The novel tells how he didn't find his treasure, but did find something else quite as good.
- No. 92-The Twin Scouts. A Story of the Old French War. By W. J. Hamilton, author of "Eagle Eye," etc. Two Scouts, each a counterpart of the other, whose exploits form the theme of a very pleasing rousance.
- No. 93-The Creole Sisters; or, the Mystery of the Ferrys. By Mrs. Ann E. Ponten. This lady writer is well known to American literature. Her tales are uniformly pure and deeply interesting. This story is one of absorbing and peculiar interest, full of that passion and mystery which tends to remance in its best elements.
- No. 94-The Mad Shipper; or, the true at the Book one very delightful to pertuse.
- No. 95-Eph Peters. The Mohawk Valley Scout. By W. J. Hamilton, author of "Eagle Eye," "Twin Scouts," etc. The Old French-Eaglish War, in which the fierce Iro-tagacious, good-humored and strong as a limit the fierce in a peculiarly graphic, ontertaining way.
- No. 96-Little Mocensin; or, Along the Madawasks. A story of lite and love in the Lumber Region. By Jour NEAL, author of "Moose Hunter," etc. This title tells its own story. John Neal's is an eminent name in American literature, and this is truly one of his best productions.
- No. 97-The Doomed Hunter: By James L. Bowse, author of "Econing Dave," etc. This exc tang tale illustrates a singular incident of forest experience, in which a brave tarough it all, giving it a twofold interest.
- No. 98-Ruth Harland. The Maid of Weatherstield. By W. J. Hammeron, author of "Eph Peters," etc. Here we have a beautiful pen-picture of frontier life, love and later. The illustrations of primitive times and da are very stirring, and the remance, as such, a thoroughly good one.
- No. 99-Overboard; or, the Double Cruise.
 By ROGER STARBUCK, author of "Cast Away,"
 "On the Deep," etc. Mr. S. is "every inch a sailor." No land-lubber rould so deguerred type sea life and saip-board experiences.
- Crows. It is the Coulow's Fato.

 Crows. It is a second second in the coulow's Fato.

 Crows. It is a second second in the coulow's Fato.

 Italia, the realless and second ing a second in the coulow is one of threefold interest, and the prove an edjoyable book.

- t w Contail to the fixed to the I Les' - Les' - Control of the contr W rom 12, 12 a r 2 e con a a c 1 a 5 , 11 ar feature in the history . It a sell a tell . to at once stirring in drama and alive with the interest of personal loves and hates.
- No. 102-Hearta Friever; or, the Old Dominion Battle-Grounds, A Tale of 1782, By bold the Spy," etc., etc. A novel of half a dosen features to attract. Filled with military and personal adventure, it is withal a love tale of charming quanties.
- No. 103-Big Foot, the Guide; or, the " regor's Daughter. A romance of early Caroffing times. By W. J. HAMILTON, author of "Twin Secute," " Eagle Eye," "Star Eyes," etc. Introducing a character somewhat celebrated in early Carolina times, and preserving, throughout, a rare intensity of interest.
- No. 101 Gulley or Not Gulley; or, the Orden of Lafe. By Mrs. ANN E. PORTER, 80ther of " Creole Staters," etc. A tale of thirty years ago, in which a well-known event made the basis of a very enthralling and finelyterrought remance. It is especially a book for boys and girls.
- No. 105 The Man In Green; or, the A THE LAST CALLS SEE THE To a many the second se for independence; while, as a love story, it is a pleasant " night's entertainment,"
- No. 100 Simple Phil. A 2 by fife . Jan. In Park 1, 1, 1, 1 or I r." The person of I per a City of the state of the same the reason of the Labor, well, $ -29 A. The Person of the Party of the
- No. 107-The Peddier Spy ; ar, Datchmen and laukees. A . " " : " C . " " Cond Boyes. By W. J. Her. The Co By Fort, the Gende," "Engle Eye," etc. No. 119-The Five Championa; or, the enjoyments; and, witchl, it is a very stirring remands of early settlement life.
- No. 108-The Lost Ship; or, a Cruise after a Shadow. By Rowall Stansuck, anthor of " a " The Country of the Parish of Parish a The second second second second The section of the se
- No. 1411 Kidninged; or, the Free Ran-or the party of th 1 A. ve the same of the sa
- No. 11 1 ... Hidden Home. By Epa war a nited with the spirit of the we do, and as exciting to its dramatic acthen as to enchain aftention to its last page, This writer is a great favority.
- Ro. 111-The Shawneer' Feet or, the Hunter of the Jan sta, B. W. J. Hawkerns, a of" Peddler "pr." "Twin Souta," etc. a s will range second to no published book de-The same of the last territories and the same of the last territories and the same of the The buck to be a contract out in the service

- No. 101-The Mall of Wyorning; or, No. 112-The Palcon Rover. By J. a. HUNGERPORD. A mingled Renance of sea Read to the state of the state life are pleasingly and graphically blended.
 - No. 113-Rattlepate; or, the Missing Deed, By J. Scott SHERWOOD. This work, by a wellke was property or, Aquito out of the one mon "run" of stories-being in person and incidents quite new and strange, and will please readers generally.
 - N. C. Izna, author of "Two Guards," "God-: No. 114-Ned Starling or, the Maranders' island. By EDWARD WILLEST, author of " Hidden Home." Mississippi life and charactor are here vividly portrayed. The writes the word to the sweet throughout the real of the and the story, as such, is exceedingly brely varied and satisfying.
 - No. 115-The Bons of Liberty; or the Mald of Tryon. A story of the Mohawk Valley in Revolutionary days. By W. J. Hamile TON, author of "Peddier Spy," "Shannees Foe," etc. A historical romance of more than ordinary attractiveness, both in the events of the story and the actors introduced.
 - No. 116-Port at Last; or, the Cruise for Honor. By ROGER STARBUCK, author of " Cast Away," " Mad Skipper," etc., etc. A good ser tale is a rare production. In this we have that and much more. It is one of this pleasing writer's most pleasing works.
 - S. J. J. Maint Hands No. 117-The Mobegan Maldent or the Stranger of the Settlement. By JAMES L. Bowrs, author of "Simple Phil," " Doomed Hunter," etc. This story is one in which a dany together passenty that is to a new age part. She is a true creature of the forest, yet ing wit me lount to in the terminer and Will we soull as true as any belie of modern days.
 - No. 114-The Water Waif; a tale of Ancient New York. By Almantes P. Sumnen, anthor of "Passing Strange," "Wedded to Death," etc. The Waif is a charming thar mater, whose heat sery, though a relief in mystery, is yet unfolded in the progress of the story, in a manner which would do no discredit to Willia Collins.
 - TETT, q " f of " Vel Ster " " !! et It of the Tell property from the state of terriors, saft e est est e e, Mr. M., .. correctors of the writer, and the or in a to produce a good see trees ment's a franci's a rid
 - No. 120-The unchback; or, the Cave Castle, By W Hamilton, author of " Sons of Liberty," " Engle Lye," etc. in presenting the somewhat singular character of the "Hunchbuck," the author has treated the read er to a creation quite unique. The story propersoner to the training of "the course of true love never did run smooth ly;" yet its very accidents are but charmons e jamies in two lives, whose love-life reads niest pleasantly.
 - No. 121-The Valled Benefactreast or, the Rocking Stone Mystery. By Scort R. SHERWOOD, author of "Rattlepute," etc. Those who have read "Rattlemate," will find in this new production of Mr. Sherwood's pen. a nevel of much fascination. The strange experiences of Gerald Provost, and the striking characters among when he moves, together with the "course of true love," between the hero and the beautiful Jeannette L'Estranga are such as to interest the reader to the and.

- No. 132 Harden, the Ranger; or, the k over of the Convent is it. J. Livertee make or of " > ms of L. erry," "Percer Spy " a e. The ex the the test of the less of a e. weekis of the same is to are will bed down a to touched with a gentle pathos by the beautiful No. 181-The Wrecker's Daughterlove-drama which impermentes the main story; like a silver thread over a somiter rubs,
- No. 123-The Missing Bride, A Story of the Settlements. By Javes L. Bowes, author of "Slaple Phil," "Border Scouts," etc. Somewhat out of the beaten path of border life, time work is calculated to give entisfaction to tures searching for interest in plot, character and development. The story, while it reads . . a trans ript in the early a sery of the West, yet is admirable as a remanes.
- No. 121-Sumter's Scouts; or, the Rider. of the Catawba. By C. DUNNING CLARK. Though a tale of South Carolina in revolutionary times, this striking and exciting story has In it elements of interest quite definet from that associated with the struggle fit independonce. It will pisses ail.
- No. 125-The Hunted Life; or, the Outcasts of the Bordor. By EDWARD WILLETT, author of "Ned Stasling," "Hidden Home," erc. A favorite story, by a favorite author, o ubracing a work of many pleasing qualities to those who relish the "old, old tale" of lave, Interwieven with the stern, stirring experiences of the early forest settlements.
- No. 126 Old June; or, a Woman's Art. A Romance of the " New Country." By Man. ORKIN JAMES. A writer whose power, grace, and keen conception of character is conceded. of the features of a story whose beauty, patinos, humor, stirring incident, mystery and subtle management of the drains raise it from the rank of ordinary stories.
- No. 127-Buld Englet or, the Last of the L Cara, merlin. By Minn. E. Oakks Smith, author of "The Newsboy," "Bertha and Lily," otc. Build Engle-the noble chief of the Ramsexugh tribe-long some extinct-is a fine ereation. Performing most important services to the cause of the Republic, "the last of his race" has lott behind him a record which it is to a first or prompted from the transfer fit is one of this eminent author's best productions.
- No. 124-The Gulch Mineral or, the Carried to a to the No. of By W. J. Hawitte 5 h a form of the first transfer of the first of State. I. constant the expense let 2 a I was the term of the term of the terms to a terms to a terms to a term to a terms to a term to The terms of terms o to the term of the part of the a it are in all interliging ites
- No. 12 + Bincheyen: r, to free tit to be a second to the second t to the first the transfer of the E - 1 15 To 2 Start to 4 To 1 to 1 C . To all you and a support as in your to ved among the denizens of the plains, many believe that some day a great city will antient worshipers of the sun are will calchrised. This remance leads us in that direction, giving us some most novel and remantic eniander of life in New Mexico during the attempted oprising in Inda.
- E 3. 180-Brave Heart; ov, the Lost Heirs of Lanwick. A Romance of the Saitlements. Is Jaren In Boxes, Land "Mar 1 to "LIED," " " THE ETIL " ATOL IN LINE TO THE dia writer's pen have we had a mure agreeable.

- even ise of the inventive faculty. We are reminded strongly, throughout, of Almard's powerful characterizations, though, in a pleasing men , it is a ter I to that nother's president impressive productions.
- A Romance of the Barnegat Beart by the author of "Old Jupe." The elements which combine to form this cory are novel in themselves—the strange, wild life on the Burnegat sands offering a singularly original field ter characterization, and the romance here woren, We be to be to the property of the ment pleasing volumes of the year.
- No. 132 Old Honesty; or, it e Green of Beebalt Tavern. A Tale of the Early Dogs of Kentucky. By EDWARD WILLATT, autror of "Hidden Home," "Five Champinas," etc. "Beehalt Tavern" is son sthing now, even for wilderness life; and "O d Honesty " as one of the characters nowadays introduced to border remance which has not the samp of claness about him. He laun "original," and she story, throughout, is one to hold the reader's attention from first to best.
- Ye. 133 Yankee Light ir, the Thwested host. And have to of the Partinage. Ly J. R. We received. In this mest pleasing production we are a decidedly original conception-the characters being of the ame heroic stamp, both male and female. Yanzee Eph, a good representucive of his ruce, it ail that odding, courage, kinduess and truth can make a nam. The love thread impermenting the narrative, like a silver thread in the midst of hills, is an exquisite forture of the story.
- "Old Jupa" is a CHARACTER, and get but one No. 131-Foul-weather Jack; or, the Double Wreck. By ROWER STARBLER, auth or of "On the Deep," "The Last Stip," etc. Marryatt never wrote any thing more graphic and impressive than the author has given us in this work. Sea life is described as it is not as a "land-lubber" conceives it to be, but as a true sailor understands it. In the character of the old skipper, Foul-weather Jack, and in his real "daughter of the deep," ituth, we have two creations which, from first to last, are the center of absorbing, pleasing interest.
 - No. 135 The Cherokee Chief; er, the White Rose of the Saluda. By J. STAM LEV HUNDERSON, author "Blackeyes," "Kerarbo," etc. There is, in this work, a commisgling of the white and red elements which will afford infinite pleasure. While the exciting thurnes of the "war of races" are parameter 4 there is in it so much of the asides of persent. adventure and the passions of affection, that is is as much a romance of the heart as of the Bartel.
 - No. 136-The Indian-Hunters; or, the Maidens of Idaho. By Janks L. Bowen, guthor of "Brave Heart," "Simple Phil." etc. The incident upon which this romance is foundis one of recent occurrence. It illustrates the fact that we have to-day as brave hearts as in the days when Boons and henton never turned a deaf ear to the call for rescue trom savings captivity of some lost daughter of the setti ments.
 - No. 127 The Treffor Spyr A Tan ! "Old Put's " Rangers. By W. J. HAMILTON, author of " Eng's Eye," etc. A hunter made lumus by sorrow, baving an undying batred of the savages, plays a leading but pathetic prid in this rejorant story-wilerein the elements | i soldierly devotion of the celebrated Hungers add to the novelty and interest of the whole. It is a veritable wilderest I Value as willy

- LEUWE I was A to see I I make Physics and a second of the se As a company of the state of th t. L. ...
- No. 139 The Border Fora; et, " ? -By conan Vi tart, a " I " . It . . esty," " Hadden Home," etc. Of the celebrated eark night in Kentucky, when the darkness to had been a first, this is not a given by the at the see " " the A deve de and the area me Rolling
- No. 140 Sirect-Anchor Tom; e., C. termine that we are the contraction to the contraction of the contract A Ir was termanification .1 4 - 4 y - 1.
- No. 111 The Helpless Hand. Br Car. TAIN CAINS SOFT TO THE THEFT IN CO. 1 5 F. 5 - 1 W. - 8- 5 F. - 1 15 5 - 1 F. - 1 P. er to be a fire a new American It was
- No. 112 The Sagamere of Sago, By WE E OANGE SWITH, author of " Bald Eagle," etc. Persones the high merit which atturbes to and its we increwe writer's works. It is a vivid
- No. 113 The swamp scout. Hawterny, author of " parder, the Ringer," We the second se the rest of the second I st to devente and a street
- No. 111-The Prairie Trappers: " the state of the s is the second second second the state of the second of
- to. The Mountaineer, To Fall ractures que novel, where, in the singular na-In a ser comment to a sum to get
- 130 Gorder Bessle, H Wat | mry J . A A Van A Van Toler In 2 to the sale of the part of
- 15' The Mail of the Mountain. B. of the Slerges, wividly : when the early gold 1 / · ·
- It's Chattered Cound; to be different On the A THE RESERVE AND A STATE OF THE PARTY OF TH " - - 1 to the series of - 1, up + 201-, 1 1 12 1-
- Ille The Hanter's Plates; or, the ANDRES - I TANK TO CONTY

- of the Toronthe end of the Interestively I att les t e attatue a est autabas wid but the part of the last of the tree is a " Character."
- 150-The Scalp-Hunter, (Double number, to cents.) By CAPTAIN MAYNE RE.D. One of the works upon which its author's beat reputation rests. It is worthy of its position in our border literature. The wind, herce lite in the far-west never had a more powerful de-
- 15 The Two Trulls, By J. STANLEY HEXDERSON, author of "Cherokee Chief," " June 11 Create," etc. The writer town transports us to the Comanche country, in-V cv s ta is 1 or rev es o. B. II there we " a series of the state of the readers, we are thoroughly delighted,
- Mayne Reid. Written by this cere and writer expressly for the Dune Nove seres, 'wat Francis e of the Total river to the conlighter passer deer entire to a de zo t _ t rately between t to the property the i the long-drama, which is the burden of the story proper.
 - 153-Mohawk Nat. By W. J. HAMILTON, author of "Twin Scouts," "Shawnees' Foe," etc. Laid in the times of the old French war, this tale is overthoning with the elements of forest romance. The character of Nat is one typical of the time-standing out in relief, as THE PARTY OF SERVICE
 - 154 Rob Ruskin, the Prairie Rover, ..., A tar ... work of its kind, graphic was a real and we tive, and absorbing in a vita
 - 135-The White Squaw : A Romance of Tampa Bay. By CAPTAIN MAYNE REID, (Double number, 20 cents.) The great novelist has quite excelled blusself in this production, to it to a li was which the car on y if 1 - 2 - 21 1 - 5.
 - I.m The Quarkeress oy. Pe William at the second to the second to the second terminal the three terms to the terms of the try and the same of th but secretiy-powerful loyanya 1: - 1 ' o The state of the s
 - 157-The Indian Avenger. By W. J. the state of the s nesota may be known by reading this wellplotted romance. The parrative is open much spirely and the story is one of exciting interusi.
 - 135 The Blue Anchor. By Bass STARBLEK, mutuer of "Outward Bound," " Sheet Anchor Tom," etc. Like all of thus author's tales of the sea, the is peculiar While it is full of searlife and sea experience, It is also full of & elements which go to make up a good love ribunce.
 - 159 -Snow Bird; or, the Trapper's Child A N N N N T. F . "If , T & edge," " Hillen Home," etc. A somewhat unique story of the plants, giving us a taste of Its wild freedom in the " pursuit under diescultiva," of the whiter after the " reds." The character of Show Bill a one to please

- 160 The Swamp Rifles. By C. D. v. 170 The Border Avengers; or, the NING CLARK, nuthur of "Tim, the Scout," "Sumter's Scouts," etc. A stirring story of stirring times, introducing several neted partiann personages, and giving a "Avid picture of the old revolutionary days when it cost something to be true to one's country
- 161.—The Lake Rangers. A tale of Teconderoga. By W. J. Hamilton. The author of " Eagle Eye," " Mohawk Nat," stehas here re-entered his favorite field of the old French war, and gives us a romance of a singularly interesting character. A maid, disguised as a young scout, plays a highly dramatic part in the story.
- 162-The Border Rivala; or, the Mill Flume Mystery. By Mrs. Orriv James, author of "Old Jupe," etc. This exquisite real re. Its policies of b rear searchy, and border ways of doing things is particularly noticeable. As a story it is intensely absorbing. Mrs. James is a great favorite.
- 168-Job Dean, the Trapper. By Ix-GOLDLESY NORTH, The first contribution of this well-known writer, to this series. It is a tale of the frontier posts, is full of adventure and Indian warfate; and in its leading characters give us comething quite original.
- 164-The Glant Chief. By W. J. HAMIL-TOY, There are few historic characters of the Indian race that stand out with more prominence than Wenons, the Giant Chief of St. ling a la this forest romance be displays himseif in an impressive manner. It is not all an "Indian " story, however, for through it runs a tine love element, characteristic of those bardy men and stirring times.
- 165-The Unseen Hand. By J. STAYLEY HENDERSON, A Revolutionary story full of the pride of patriotism, the perils and the vicissitudes of fortunes attendant upon the old struggle, The scene is laid in South Carolina, whose swamp fastnesses are redulent of the fame of Marion's men.
- 166-The Red-Skin's Pledge. By Javes L. Bowan, author of "Simple Phil," etc. This #1 । १ g २०५ त तर्गारक र विश्वास तथा थी । स्टेस कुछ द्वार तथा audicient for a half dozen ordinary "popular" LOVEIS,
- 167-Shadow Jack. By Roour Starnick, "The sea, the sea, the open sea!" never had fuller, freer characterization. It is such a volume as the ' Life Before the Mast" author could have written, yet is better than that jes v celebrated work, in that it is a powerful story of heart-life as well as of the sen.
- 185-The bilent Hunter; or, the Scowl Hall Mystery. Double Number, complete. Price 20 cents. By PERCY B, ST. JOHN. The Silent Hunter, Harrod; the young artist, but traction, It saw the tree trees for the deal for the section of the first termination of the section of the secti voted Indian lover and dauntless "brave;" Barton, the pietestable intriguer and villainall are characters a bich stand forward in bold relief from the background of the intensely drainatic and exciting story.
- IG9- The White Cancer or, the Spirit of Hunter," This production, by a well-known mance. It gives us forest-like with remarkable Viridness; but, after all, its story, as a story, is the calef feature. The tradition of an Indian chisf following a phantom is made the basis of a said of a tourner benedly and power.

- White Prophetess of the Delawares, By En-WARD WILLETT, author of "Hidden Home," " Hunter's Pledge," etc. The early life of the celabrated Wetzel brothers is here made the theme of a very powerful romance, giving as a Vivil remembrat oclober, deer occa n tie border when each man literally carried his life In his hands. As a story it is exquisitely told, and full of the tenderness which aprings from. the "grand passion,"
- 171-The Silent Slayer. By the author of "Giant Chief," The varied interest of this volume, and the admirable nature of the - ry are qualities to give it a wide reputation. It is at once powerful, pleasing and peculiar, The author is one of the best in the field of Indian and forest fiction now writing for the prese,
- romance of the settlements will please all 172-Despurd, the Spy. A Romance of the Fall of Montreal. By the author of the "Silent Slayer," This remance grew out of the preceding. Although complete in Itself, it is a sequence of the enterral to be burned & ster, with which Disposed materials the new posts, also ment of their great purpose—to break the power of the Leer hala Aneria a Torontowork of more interest, or of more striking dramatic excellence, in the entire Dime Novels series.
 - 178-The Red Coyote; or, Lupah, the Flower of the Prairie. By ALBERT W. AIKEN, author of "The White Vulture." Gustave Almard never wrote any thing more thrilling tions the free result of the a column to very fully illustrates life in those fair but far regions.
 - 174-The Queen of the Woods; or, the Showber Carting By Little B. St Jens, author of "Stient Hunter," "White Canoe," etc. This celebrated writer never writes a dull chapter. In this really absorbing romance of the wildwoods we have stirring pictures of daring men, and, strangely enough, of beautiful Women.
 - 175-The Prairie Riflen; or, the Captives of New Mexico. A Romance of the South-west. By HENRY J. THOMAS, author of "Wrong Man," "Wrecker's Prize," etc. One reason why the south-west is chosen by our best writers as the scene of their dramas, le that it encourages the freest invention. No plot or character can exceed the truth. This novel, by a favorite pen, will greatly delight the lovers of border remance.
 - 176-The Trader Spy; or, the Victim of the Fire Raft. By J. STANLEY HENDERSON, author of "Red Plume," "Two Trails," etc. A strange and stirring story of the great Pon tiac's time-a story of savare chivalry-of love-of strategy and blood-brilliantly illustrative of a very romantic episode in American history.
 - 177-The Pale-Face Squaw; or, the Last Arrow. By C. DUNNING CLARK, author of "Sumter's Scouts," "Tim, the Scout," etc., Here again a tradition of our early aettlements is made the basis of a tale of many charms, At measure and strong to the very nature of the action it is yet full of the pathon of live-a white "squaw's" love for a true forest nobleman.
- the lane, if the armed the " and 174 The Prairie Bride; or, the Santter's to any . A for a confirm for the state of the West, By MRs. HENRY J. THOMAS, author of " Border Bessie," Such novels as there are a treat. Evidently a transcript from a family history, it is yet so entiring us a life and love romance as to quite captivate the reader, water OF TORING-

BEADLE'S DIME FICTION.

Double-Column, Octavo.

- Me. 1-The Marked Bullet; or, the Equaw's Reprieve. A Tale of the Border. By GEORGE HENRY PRENTICE. The peculiar nature of the main incldent, and the mystery in which it is involved, are only exceeded in their absorbing interest by the singular characters introduced and their individual contributions to the evente of the narrative.
- No. 2-The Outlaw Brothers; or, the Captive of the Harpes. A Tale of the Early Kentucky Settlements. By John J. Man-BHALL. The celebrated Harpe family are here brought into the foreground to play the part of principals in a tale of vivid interest and power. It is, literally, a "succession of novelties," and gives us such a photograph of early Kentucky life and experiences as will not be forgotten.
- No. 5-The Willing Captive; A Romance of the Ohio River. By J. STANLEY HENDERSON. If the reader would " laugh and grow fat," he or she should secure this Pacy production. It is so perfectly typical of life "all the way from Ca-i-ro to Tiptou," that the laughable creations of "Solitairs" are again redivivos.
- No. 4-The Deer Hunters; or, Life and Love in the Ottawa Country. By John J. Manuschall, author of "Outlaw Brothers," etc. The noted Sandusky Bay is here made to give "P some of its early remance. "Black Pete," and his black dog, "Zip," are decided originals, and give to the story an element of humor and fon peculiarly refreshing.
- No. 5-The Dacotah Queen; or, Pat Mulloney's Pilgrimage. An episode in Life on the Plains. By C. L. EDWARDS. Here we!

- have an inimitable transcript of life among the "red niggers" of the North-west. What with Pat Mulloney and his rival "Bandylegs," with the noble and noted "Red-Feather," and the adventurous young hunter, Roger Mayfield, we have a dramatic personm of a highly excitable character.
- No. 6-Missing Jos or, the Mystery of Camp White. A romance of the Tents. By J. STANLEY HENDERSON, Buthor of "Willing Captive," etc. This is a story to be remembered. Its picture of camp-life is perfect; but that is all merely incidental to a camp mystery which the wit of few can unravel until " Missing Jo" turns up again, and reveals one of the passages of "life in the service" not commonly recorded.
- No. 7-Gottlieb Gottsoock; or, the Bride the Wilderness. By GEORGE HENRY PREN-TICE, author of "Marked Builet," etc. In which the perils of the Border are interwoven with the humors of backwoods life in a manner to render the work very enjoyable.
- No. 8-Prairie Chick; or, the Quaker among the Redskins. By J. STANLEY HEN-DERSON. A new work, by the author of "Willing Captive," and "Missing Jo," full of fun and that lively interest of story which characterize the author's previous romances.
- No. 9-Roving Ben; or, the Cruise of the Adelaide. By John J. MARSHALL, author of "Deer Hunters," "Outlaw Brothers," etc. This romance of adventure by water and land has in it the most singular elements of interest. It is at once instructive, enticing and satisfy. ing-something quite new in the way of story, character and incident.

BEARD DES DIGHT BROKEN

Regular 12mo.

- No. 1-The White-Faced Pacer: A Story of the Revolution. By JOHN NEAL. Mr. Neal is one of our most noted writers. In this story he introduces us to the men and times of the great day of struggle for Independencethe hero being Nathan Hale, who died the death of a spy, and lamented that he had but one life to give for his country.
- No. 3-The Blacksmith of Autwerp: romance are so real as to read like facts-which, Indeed, the main incidents are. The quaint old town of Antwerp, with its quaint Dutch inhabitants with their qualit Dutch ways, is daguerreotyped to the very life-both "high life," and life no "higher" than an honest blacksmith's anvil.
- No. 8-The Maiden Martyr ; An Eplands from Early New England History. In this powevial and bouching production we have a narration which makes some pages of New England's history hateful enough to be blotted out with Bars. While it tells the sad story of Salem Witcherselt, it also reproduces the inward and

- outward life of the Puritan, with a masterly hand, and leaves upon the reader's min's wivid picture of those atrange times and earnest people.
- No. 4-The Loyalisty or the Channel Scourge. A Tals of the Protectorate and Restoration. The character and doings of the celebrated naval hero, Earl of Sussex-familiarly known as " Red Hand"-are here embodied in an extremely exciting romance.
- A Tale of True Nobility. The features of this No. 5-The Country Cousin. This colightful novel introduces us to a series of characters and incidents of a lively and exciting nature. It is a real love stor 7, in which there are, however, other elements than those of the Divine Passion.
 - No. 6-The Messenger; or, the Mysterious Page of Greeham Grange. By HERRICK JOHNSTONE. In this nove, we have placed before us the lives and characters of the eventful year when Charles II. struck for his English throne, and lost all in the bloody battle of Worcester. The heroine of this romance is a fine impersonation of a true woman-many of whom those sad times produced.

AMERICAN TALES.

OCTAVO SERIES. PRICE FIFTEEN CENTS.

- 1. ON THE PLAINS; er, the Race for Life.
- 3. THE BORDER SPY; or, the Beautiful Captive of the Rebel Camp,
- 1. HERMIT OF COLORADO HILLS. A Romance of the Pampas.
- 4. FREE TRAPPERS' PASS; or, the Gold-Seeker's Daughter.
- & BOB BRANT, PATRIOT AND SPY. A Tale of the War in the West,
- 6. THE GUERRILLAS OF THE OSAGE; OF, Loyalty on the Border,
- 7. OLD BILL WOODWORTH, Scout of the Cumberland.
- 8, THE ORONOCO CHIEF; or, the Fortunes of a Diamond Locket.
- 9. THE PRISONER OF THE MILL; or, the Captain's " Body Guard."
- 16 THE SECRET SHOT; or, the Rivals of Misty Mount.
- 11. THE VICKSBURG SPY; or, Found and Lost.
- 12. CALIFORNIA JOE; or, the Angel of the Wilderness
- 13 CRAZY DAN; or, Fight Fire with Fire.
- 14 THE TRAITOR'S DOOM; or the Helress of Bella Vista.
- 15. THE FREEBOOTERS; or, the Rivale of the GulL
- 16. OLD HAL WILLIAMS, the Spy'of Atlanta.
- 17. KATE SHARP; or, the Two Conscripts.
- 18. THE FRONTIER SCOUTS; or, the Young Ranger's Life Mystery.
- 19. SERGEANT SLASHER; or, the Border Fend.
- 20. SCOUTING DAVE; or, the Winnebago Renegade,
- 21. THE LOYAL SPECTER; or, the True Hearts of Atlanta-
- Night Island.

- 23. BELLA BURT, the Bushwhacker's Daugh-
- 24 THE WOOD DEMON. A Legend of the Susquehanna.
- 25, TRUE BLUE; or the Writing in Cipher.
- 26. THE YANKEE SCOUT; or, Haps and Mishaps of the Border.
- 27, THE OLD FLAG; or, Home at Last.
- 28. OLD PEGGY BOGGS; or, Old Dominion In side Out
- 29. THE COTTON THIEF. A Tale of the Red River Country,
- 30. OLD GUESS MARKHAM; or, the Cavalry Scoul
- 31. OLD RUBE, THE HUNTER; or, the Crow Captive.
- 32. THE SCOUT'S VOW, A Story of Early Ohio.
- 33. OLD BEN MANX; or, the Secret Dispatches.
- 24. THE REGULATORS; or, Life in Arkansas Before the War.
- 35. TOM WILEY, the Scout of the North West.
- 36. STUNG SERPENT, the Last Chief of the Natchez,
- 37. BORDER BEN; or the Fatal Treasure.
- 38. JULIA BARTRAM; or, the Swamp Secuta
- 39. ONE-EYED SIM; or the Abandoned Forest Home.
- 40. SCUTTLED; or, Bresie, the Slaver's Daugh-Ler.
- 41. THE SILVER BULLET; or, the Backwoods Somnar bullat.
- 42 MIKE THE GUIDE; or, Lost upon the Piains.
- 43. BLACK STEED OF THE PRAIRIES; OL Days of Peril.
- THE CAVE SECRET; or, the Mystery of 44. THE CUTTER'S CRUISE; or, the Mate's Strategy, SECOND SERIES.

One Hundred Pages Crown Octavo, 15 Cents.

- 1. Loyal Heart, the Pale-Face Hunter.
- B, The Trail-Hunter; or, Red Cedar, the Prairie Outlaw.
- 8. The Pirates of the Prairies; or, the Bandit at Bay.
- 4. The Trapper's Daughter; or, the Outlaw's Tate.

DIFTY CENT BOOKS.

twenty-two illustrations.

Romanes of the Green Seal. By Mrs. Catharine Our New States and Territories. By Mr. A. D. A. Warfield, with frontisplece on toned paper. Richardson, with forty-five illustrations,

The Dead Letter. By Seeley Regester, with | Who Was Hel By Mrs. M. V. Victor, with frontisplecs.

THE DEAD LETTER.

LIBRARY EDITION, Cloth Blading. Price,

STANDARD

Games and Pastimes for 1870.

BEADLE'S DIME SERIES.

HAND-BOOK OF CROQUET.

A complete guide to the Principles and Practice of the Game. This popular pastime has, during the few years of its existence, rapidly outgrown the first vague and imperfect rules and regulations of its inventor; and, as almost every house at which it is played adopts a different code of laws, it becomes a difficult matter for a tranger to assimilate his play to that of other people. It is, therefore, highly desirable that one uniform system should be generally adopted, and hence the object of this work is to establish a recognized method of playing the game.

CRICKET AND FOOT-BALL.

A desirable Cricketer's Companion, containing complete instructions in the elements of Bowling, Batting and Fielding: also the Revised Laws of the game; Remarks on the Duties of Umpires; the Mary-le-Bone Cricket Club Rules and Regulations; Bets, etc., etc. By Henry Chadwick, author of "Base-Ball Player."

YACHTING AND ROWING.

This volume will be found very complete as a guide to the conduct of watercraft, and full of interesting information alike to the amateur and the novice. "The chapter referring to the "ecent great rowing race of the Oxford and Cambridge clubs, on the Thames, will be found particularly interesting.

RIDING AND DRIVING.

A sure guide to correct Horsemanship, with complete directions for the road and field; and a specific section of directions and information for female equestrians. Drawn largely from "Stonehenge's" fine manual, this volume will be found all that can be desired by those seeking to know all about the horse, and his management in harness and under the saddle.

GUIDE TO SWIMMING.

Embracing all the rules of the art for both sexes. Illustrated. By Captain Phillip Peterson, comprising Advisory Instructions; Rules upon entering the water; General Directions for Swimming; Diving; how to come to the surface; Swimming on the Back; how to Swim in times of Danger; Sea-bathing—how to manage the waves, the tides, etc.; a Chapter for the Ladies; a Specimen Female Swimming-School; how to manage cases of Drowning; Dr. Franklin's "Code" for Swimmers.

For sale by all Newsdealers and Booksellers; or will be sent singly or in pack ages by mail, post-poid, on receipt of price—Ten Cents each.

- 26

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers,
98 William Street. New York.

BEADLE'S STANDARD DIME PUBLICATIONS.

One Hundred Pages 12mo. Ten Cents Each.

Dime Novels.

1. Malnesku,

2. The Privateer's Crube.

3. Myra.

4. Affice Wilde.

5. The Golden Bell

6. Chip, the Cave Child.

7. The Reeler of 76.

S. Seth Jones.

9. The Slave Sculptor.

10. The Backwoods Bride.

11. Primmer La Vintresso. 12. Bill Bidden, Trapper.

Cedar Swamp.

14. Emerald Necklace. 15. The Frontier Angel.

16. Uncle Ezskiel.

17. Madge Wylde. 18. Nat Todds

19. Massasoit's Daughber.

20. Florida.

21. Sybil Chase,

22. The Maid of Esopus.

23. Winiferd Winthrop. 24. The Trail Hunters.

25. The Peon Prince.

26. Brethren of the Count.

27. Daughter of Liberty.

28. King Barnaby.

29. The Forest Spy. 30. Pat Poinfret's Ward.

31. The Double Here.

32. Irone.

33. Maum towines."

34. Ruth Margerie.

35. East and West. 36. Riflemen of the Mand, 315. The Sans of Liberty.

37. Godbold, the Spy.

38. The Wrong Man.

39, The Land Claim.

40, Unboost's Daughter. 41. The Hunter's Cabin.

42. The King's Man.

43. The Atlena.

44. Agnes Falkland.

45. Esther.

46. Wreck of the Albion.

47. Tim Banthle's Charge.

48. Conomico, the Horon.

49. The Gold Hunters.

50. The Black Strip.

51. The Two Guards.

57. Single Eye.

53. Hates and Loves.

54. Myrtle. 55. Off and Da.

56. Aluno's Plot.

Mi. The Scout.

58. The Mad Hunter.

59. Kent, the Ranger.

60. Jo Daviese Client.

61. Laughing Eyes.

52. The Unknown.

83. The Indian Princess,

64. Rangers of Mohawk.

65. The Wrecker's Prize.

66. The Hunter's Vow.

67. Indian Jun.

The Brigantine.

69. Black Hollow.

The Indian Queen.

The Lost Trail.

12. The Moose Hunter.

73. The Silver Bugle. 74. Craiser of Chesapeake,

75. The Hufiter's Escape.

76. The Scout's Prize.

77. Quindaro.

78, The Rival Scouts.

19. Schuylkill Rangers.

80, Eagle Eye.

Sl. The Two Hunters.

St. The Mystic Cance.

83. The Gulden Harpoon.

84. The Seminole Chief.

85. The Fugitives. 56. Red Plume.

87, On the Deep.

88. Captain Molly.

89. Star Eyes.

90. Cant Away.

The Lost Cache.

99. The Twin Scouts. 13. The Creole Sisters.

94. The Mad Skipper.

95. Eph Peters.

96. Little Moccasin.

97. The Dogmed Hunter.

98. Ruth Harland. 99. Overboard.

100. Karaiba.

101. Maid of Wyoming.

102, Hearts Forever.

103. Blg Foot, the Gulde.

194. Unilty or Not Guilty.

105. The Man in Green.

106. Simple Phil.

107. The Paddler Spy.

108. The Last Ship. 109. Kldnapped.

110. The Hidden Home

III. The Shawness' For.

112. The Falcon Rover. 113. Rattlepate.

114. Ned Starling.

116. Port at Last.

117. The Mohegun Maiden.

11s. The Water Wait

The Five Champions.

The Hunchback.

Vailed Benefactress.

Barden, the Ranger.

The Missing Bride. 123.

124. Sumter's Scouts.

The Hunted Life.

176, Old Jupa.

Bald Engle.

198. The Gulch Miners.

122. Blackeyes. 130. Brave Hours.

131. Wrecker's Daughter.

132. Old Honesty. . .

133. Yankee Epb.

134. Foul-wenther Jack.

135. The Cherokee Chief.

136. The Indian-Bunters. 137. The Traitor Spy.

138. Tim, the Scoot

139. The Border Fors.

140. Sheet-Aucher Tom.

The Helpiasa Hand.

142. The Sagamers of Sacre

The Swamp Scout. 140.

144. The Prairie Trappers.

145. The Mountaineer. 146, Border Sessie.

147. Mald of the Mountain.

14s. Outward Bound.

149. The Hunter's Pledge.

150. The Scalp-Hunters."

lot. The Two Trails.

152. The Planter Pirate. 153. Mohnwk Nat.

154. Rob Ruskin.

155. The White Squaw."

156. The Quakerese Spy.

157. The Indian Avenger, 15.

" Novels marked with a star are double numbers, 200 pages. Price 20 cents-

160. The Swamp Rifles.

158. The Blue Auchor.

159. Snowbird.

16L The Lake Rangers.

169. The Border Rivals.

163. Job Dean, Trapper. 164. The Giant Chief.

165. The Unseen Hand.

166. Red-Skin's Pleage.

167. Shadow Jack. 168. The Silent Hunter.

169. The White Canos. 170. The Border Avengera

171. The Silent Slayer. 172. Despard, the Spy.

173. The Red Coyota-174. Queen of the Woods.

175. The Prairie Rifles. 176. The Trader Spy.

177. The Pale-face Squaw. 138. The Prairie Bride.

179. The White Vulture. 180. Giant Pete, Patriot.

181. Old Kyle, the Traller. 182, Jabez Hawk,

183. The Phantom Ship. 184. The Red Rider.

185. The Dacotah Scourge. 186. The Red Scalper.

The Ontlaws' Plot. 188. The Black Rover.

189, The Yellow Chink

190. Phantom Horseman.

191. Red Slayer. 192. The Specier Skipper.

193. The Swamp Riders.

194. Graylock, the Guide. 195. The First Trail.

196. Engls Plume.

197. Shawnes Scout. 198. Burt Bunker.

19R Red Outlaw. 200. Prairie Puthtinder-

201. White Serpont. 202. Phanton For.

203. Masked Galds.

Dime School Paries.

1. American Speaker.

2. National Spoaker. 3. Patriotic Speaker.

4. Comir Speaker,

5. Elecutionist.

6. Humorous Speaker. 7. Stundard Speaker.

R. Stump Speaker.

Juvenile Speaker. 10. Spread-Eagle Speaker.

11. Dime Dabster. DIALUGUES, NOS. 1 to 9.

Melodist. School Biologist,

Dime Blographics.

1. GarfbaldL 2. Daniel Booms.

3. Kil Carson. 4. Authory Wayne.

5. David Crockett.

8. Winneld Scott. 7. Pontine.

8. John C. Fremont. 2. John Paul Jones.

10. Marquis de Lafazotte. M. Teggnash, 12. George B. McClallan, 12. Parson Brownlow. 14. Abraham Lincoln.

Ulyanes S. Grant

For sale by all Newsdealers; or sent, rosz-PAID, to any address, on receipt of price.

Dime Game-Books,

Base-Ball Player for 1870. Curling and Skating.

Ball-room Companion. Book of Pedestrianism.

Book of Croquel.

Cricket and Foot-ball, Yachting and Rowing.

Riding and Driving. Gulde to Swimming.

Chess Instructor. Dime Hand-Books.

1. Letter-Writer. 9. Book of Etiquette.

3. Book of Verses

7. Lovers' Cashet.

4. Book of Drague.

5. Fortune-Teller, 6. Ludies" Letter-Writer.

Dime Family Series. I. Cook Book.

2. Recips Book.

S. Housewife's Manual. 4. Family Physician.

5. Dressmaking, Millinery, Dime Song Books.

Pocket Songsters, I to a Song Snoka, Non I to 25.

Missellaneous. Diner Fremon, 1 to 9. DIME LABRARY, I to 6.

DINE TALES, Non. 1 to 12.

BROKE OF FEB. Non I to . House that Jack Built. Robinson Crusce (Hust de

Grant's Report ___ Shermann's Report,

American Tales. ARCOND STREET -150 BACH.

Loyal Heart.

2. The Trail Hunter. A scales of the Prairies.

4. Trapper's Daughter.

5. Puthaway.

6. Whitehau

The White Winard. Bend, the Wunchback.

The Red Warrier. 10. Qualter Sant,

11. Monutain Max. Thayendapegva.

Hodgath, the Avenger, Prairie-Flower.

15. Redporth, the Avenger. 16. Tiger-Slayer.

17. Red Ralph, the Ranger. 18, Silent Rifleman.

19. Fiving Homesonn. The Gold-Gulde-

7). The Death Truck. FIRST SERIES, Nos. 1 to 44.

25 Cent Novels. 125 TO IM OCTAVO PASSES.

1. Sybil Campbell. 2. The Prophetic Heiren. The Gipsy Queen's Vow

Fifty Cent Books. The Figure Eight. The Dead Letter.

Romance of Green Seal. Who Was Hot

4. Unmarked.

Our New States, etc.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.